

العشور الوسطى

AL-‘UṢŪR AL-WUṢṬĀ 27 (2019)

THE JOURNAL OF
MIDDLE EAST MEDIEVALISTS

About

Middle East Medievalists (MEM) is an international professional non-profit association of scholars interested in the study of the Islamic lands of the Middle East during the medieval period (defined roughly as 500–1500 C.E.). MEM officially came into existence on 15 November 1989 at its first annual meeting, held in Toronto. It is a non-profit organization incorporated in the state of Illinois. MEM has two primary goals: to increase the representation of medieval scholarship at scholarly meetings in North America and elsewhere by co-sponsoring panels; and to foster communication among individuals and organizations with an interest in the study of the medieval Middle East. As part of its effort to promote scholarship and facilitate communication among its members, MEM publishes al-ʿUṣūr al-Wuṣṭā (The Journal of Middle East Medievalists).

EDITORS

Antoine Borrut, University of Maryland

Matthew S. Gordon, Miami University

MANAGING EDITOR

Christiane-Marie Abu Sarah, University of Maryland

BOOK REVIEW EDITORS

Malika Dekkiche, University of Antwerp

Luke Yarbrough, University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA)

EDITORIAL BOARD,

AL-ʿUṢŪR AL-WUṢṬĀ (THE JOURNAL OF MIDDLE EAST MEDIEVALISTS)

Zayde Antrim, Trinity College

Sobhi Bouderbala, University of Tunis

Muriel Debié, École Pratique des Hautes Études

Fred M. Donner, University of Chicago

David Durand-Guédy, Institut Français de Recherche en Iran

Nadia Maria El-Cheikh, American University of Beirut

Maribel Fierro, Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Científicas

Emma Gannagé, Georgetown University

Denis Genequand, Site et Musée romains d'Avenches

Ahmet Karamustafa, University of Maryland

Étienne de La Vaissière, École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales

Stephennie Mulder, The University of Texas at Austin

Marina Rustow, Princeton University

Isabel Toral-Niehoff, Free University of Berlin

Alison M. Vacca, University of Tennessee, Knoxville

Peter Webb, Leiden University

ISSN 1068-1051

Copyright © 2019 Middle East Medievalists. All rights reserved.

For submission guidelines, contact: aborrut@umd.edu.

Website of the Middle East Medievalists: <http://middleeastmedievalists.com/>

Website of al-ʿUṣūr al-Wuṣṭā (The Journal of Middle East Medievalists):

<https://www.middleeastmedievalists.com/al-usur-al-wusta/>

Become a member of the Middle East Medievalists:

<https://www.middleeastmedievalists.com/membership-application/>

BOARD OF DIRECTORS, MIDDLE EAST MEDIEVALISTS

President

Sarah Bowen Savant, Aga Khan University

Vice-President

Zayde Antrim,
Trinity College, Hartford Connecticut

Secretary

Alison M. Vacca,
University of Tennessee, Knoxville

Treasurer

Eric Hanne, Florida Atlantic University

Board Members

Kristina L. Richardson, *Queens College,
City University of New York*

Craig A. Perry, University of Cincinnati

Editor of H-MEM

James Weaver, University of Zurich

Graduate Student Representative

Aurora González Artigao, *Consejo Superior
de Investigaciones Científicas-Spanish
National Research Council, Madrid*

Al-ʿUṣūr al-Wuṣṭā (Editorial Office)

Antoine Borrut, Editor

Department of History, University of Maryland

2115 Francis Scott Key Hall,

College Park, MD 20742-7315 USA

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Letter from the Editors, Antoine Borrut and Matthew S. Gordon ..... i-ii

MEM AWARDS:

Remarks by Donald Whitcomb,
Recipient of the 2018 MEM Lifetime Achievement Award ..... iii-ix

ARTICLES:

In Search of the Early Islamic Economy
Michael Bonner ..... 1-39

Reacting to Muḥammad: Three Early Islamic Poets in the Kitāb al-Aghānī
Pamela Klasova ..... 40-111

A Newly Discovered Letter of the Early Arabic Alphabet: A Distinction between Final Jīm and Final Ḥāʾ/Khāʾ and Its Nabataean Origins
Marijn van Putten ..... 112-164

Nourishing the Noble: Breastfeeding and Hero-Making in Medieval Arabic Popular Literature
Rachel Schine ..... 165-200

An Unexpected Romance: Reevaluating the Authorship of the Khosrow-nāma
Austin O'Malley ..... 201-232

REVIEW ESSAYS:

Women, Identity, and Power: A Review Essay of Antony Eastmond, Tamta's World
Zaroui Pogossian ..... 233-266

CONFERENCE REPORTS:

Mysticism and Ethics in Islam (American University of Beirut, 2-3 May 2019)
Louise Gallorini ..... 267-272

BOOK REVIEWS:

Daniel Alan Brubaker, Corrections in Early Qurʾānic Manuscripts: Twenty Examples
Hythem Sidky ..... 273-288

Jennifer A. Cromwell, Recording Village Life: A Coptic Scribe in Early Islamic Egypt
Marie Legendre ..... 289-296

TABLE OF CONTENTS (CONT.)

BOOK REVIEWS (CONT.):

|  |         |
|--|---------|
| Mathieu Tillier, L'invention du cadi: La justice des Musulmans, des Juifs et des Chrétiens aux premiers siècles de l' IslamSteven Judd .....                | 297–300 |
| Hans-Peter Pökel, Der unmännliche Mann: Zur Figuration des Eunuchen im Werk von al-Ġāhiz (gest. 869)Ignacio Sánchez .....                                   | 301–304 |
| Scott Savran, Arabs and Iranians in the Islamic Conquest Narrative: Memory and Identity Construction in Islamic Historiography, 750–1050Ryan J. Lynch ..... | 305–308 |
| Adam Talib, How Do You Say “Epigram” in Arabic? Literary History at the Limits of ComparisonRachel Schine .....   | 309–314 |
| William Chester Jordan, The Apple of His Eye: Converts from Islam in the Reign of Louis IXJanna Bianchini .....   | 315–318 |
| Joel Blecher, Said the Prophet of God: Hadith Commentary across a MillenniumL. W. Cornelis van Lit, O.P. ....   | 319–325 |
| Thomas A. Carlson, Christianity in Fifteenth-Century IraqJonathan Parkes Allen .....  | 326–333 |
| Khaled El-Rouayheb and Sabine Schmidtke, eds., The Oxford Handbook of Islamic PhilosophyColeman Connolly .....  | 334–339 |

IN MEMORIAM:

|  |         |
|--|---------|
| Remembering Speros Vryonis, Jr. (1928–2019)Gary Leiser .....  | 340–344 |
| “May His Memory Be Blessed”: Remembering Kenneth G. Holum (1939–2017)Gideon Avni, Elizabeth Conner, and Alan Walmsley ..... | 345–353 |
| Remembering Michael Bonner (1952–2019)Steven Judd, Alison Vacca, Robert Haug, Noah Gardiner, and Antoine Borrut .....       | 354–362 |

An Unexpected Romance: Reevaluating the Authorship of the Khosrow-nāma*

AUSTIN O'MALLEY
The University of Arizona

(austinomalley@email.arizona.edu)

Abstract

This article examines the authorship of the Khosrow-nāma, a Perso-Hellenic romance traditionally attributed to 'Aṭṭār. Forty years ago, Shafī'i-Kadkani laid out a complex argument against 'Aṭṭār's authorship. He claimed that the attribution was a result of a later forgery, basing his argument on internal chronological evidence, religious and stylistic markers, and the manuscript tradition. The present article systematically evaluates this argument, showing it to be less persuasive than it first appears. First, I introduce new manuscript evidence to demonstrate that the poem was circulating under 'Aṭṭār's name already before the time of the alleged forgery. I then reassess the internal evidence to show that the Khosrow-nāma could, in fact, fit into a plausible chronology of 'Aṭṭār's oeuvre. Next, I critique the stylistic and religious arguments against 'Aṭṭār's authorship, arguing that the romance does not deviate from 'Aṭṭār's undisputed works nearly as much as is often supposed. I conclude by suggesting that the available data are explained more easily by accepting 'Aṭṭār's authorship than by adopting the theory of a later forgery.

Few poets have had as far-reaching an influence as Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār (d. ca. 618/1221). The author of the famous Manteq al-ṭayr and several other important works, he is remembered both within the tradition and outside it as a critical figure in the development of Persian mystical poetry.<sup>1</sup> As is the case with many premodern Persian poets, as

---

* Although this paper generally follows the transliteration guidelines of the International Journal of Middle East Studies, vowels are transliterated according to the system of Encyclopaedia Iranica, which is phonetically more accurate for Persian: short vowels appear as “a,” “e,” and “o,” and long ones as “ā,” “ī,” and “u.” I would like to thank Cameron Cross, Alexandra Hoffmann, Alexander Jabbari, Franklin Lewis, and Matthew Miller for their comments and suggestions in the preparation of this paper.

1. Moḥammad Rezā Shafī'i-Kadkani, introduction to Manteq al-ṭayr, by Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, 2nd ed. (Tehran: Sokhan, 1387/[2008–9]), 38–50; Julian Baldick, “Persian Ṣūfī Poetry up to the Fifteenth Century,” in History of Persian Literature: From the Beginning of the Islamic Period to the Present Day, ed. George Morrison (Leiden: Brill, 1981); Seyyed Hossein Nasr, “Some Observations on the Place of 'Aṭṭār within the Sufi Tradition,” in Colloquio italo-iraniano sul poeta mistico Fariduddin 'Aṭṭār (Roma, 24–25 Marzo 1977) (Rome: Accademia his fame grew spurious works began to circulate under his name. With 'Aṭṭār, however, the number of spurious attributions is staggering: by the eleventh/seventeenth century, he was said to have composed a total of 114 works, equal to the number of suras in the Quran.<sup>2</sup> Given the sacral significance of the number, it cannot be taken as an accurate count of all attributions, but it testifies to the scale of his supposed output. According to 'Ali Miranṣāri, who has produced a bibliographical survey of 'Aṭṭār's works, at least fifty-nine independent titles, many of them still extant, have at some point been attributed to him.<sup>3</sup> Some of these works were composed by other poets who went by the name of 'Aṭṭār, and their poems were inadvertently absorbed into the oeuvre of their more famous predecessor.<sup>4</sup> Others, however, were deliberate forgeries: the Lesān al-ghayb and the Mazhar al-‘ajā‘eb, for instance, were written by a ninth/fifteenth-century Shi‘i poet, 'Aṭṭār-e Tuni, who purposefully presented himself as Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, the author of the Manteq al-ṭayr.<sup>5</sup>

In the twentieth century, with the advancement of textual criticism, scholars such as Qazvini, Sherani, Nafisi, and Ritter began to methodically whittle away at these spurious accretions to 'Aṭṭār's oeuvre.<sup>6</sup> Through their work, a stable scholarly consensus emerged: 'Aṭṭār was thought to have written four mystical-didactic maṣnavis (the Elāhi-nāma, the Manteq al-ṭayr, the Asrār-nāma, and the Moṣibat-nāma), a divān, a collection of quatrains (the Mokhtār-nāma), and a prose hagiography (Tazkerat al-awliā). These scholars also accepted as authentic a maṣnavi romance that was commonly attributed to 'Aṭṭār and known as the Khosrow-nāma. Unlike 'Aṭṭār's mystical-didactic maṣnavis, which comprise short anecdotes and homiletic exhortations, the Khosrow-nāma recounts the story of two royal lovers, tragically separated, as they seek to reunite; it is thus reminiscent of Greek novels and Perso-Hellenic romances such as Varqa o Golshāh and Vis o Rāmin. The work is a clear generic outlier in 'Aṭṭār's oeuvre; nevertheless, because 'Aṭṭār includes the title Khosrow-nāma in a list of his works, and because the author of the Khosrow-nāma identifies himself as 'Aṭṭār and as the author of the Manteq al-ṭayr, the abovementioned scholars accepted the poem as genuine.

---

Nazionale dei Lincei, 1978), 12–13; Husayn Ilahi-Gomeshei, "Of Scent and Sweetness: 'Aṭṭār's Legacy in Rūmī, Shabistārī, and Ḥāfiẓ," in 'Aṭṭār and the Persian Sufi Tradition: The Art of Spiritual Flight, ed. Leonard Lewisohn and Christopher Shackle (London: I. B. Tauris and Institute of Ismaili Studies, 2006).

2. Sayyed Nurallāh Shushtari, Majāles al-mo'menin (Tehran: Ketāb-forushi-ye Eslāmiya, 1365/[1986–87]), 99.

3. 'Ali Miranṣāri, Ketāb-shenāsi-ye Shaykh Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi (Tehran: Anjoman-e Āṣār va Mafākhar-e Farhangi, 1384/[2005–6]), 7–16.

4. Mirzā Moḥammad Qazvini, introduction to Tazkerat al-awliā, by Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, ed. Reynold Nicholson (London: Luzac, 1905), 1:14; Hellmut Ritter, "Philologika X: Farīdaddīn 'Aṭṭār," Der Islam 25 (1939): 157.

5. 'Abdu'l-Ḳādir Sarfarāz, A Descriptive Catalogue of the Arabic, Persian and Urdu Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Bombay (Bombay: University of Bombay, 1935), 60–65; Sa'id Nafisi, Jostoju dar aḥvāl va āṣār-e Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi (Tehran: Eqbāl, 1320/[1941]), 147–54; Hellmut Ritter, "Philologika XIV: Farīduddīn 'Aṭṭār II," Oriens 11, no. 1/2 (1958): 3–4.

6. Qazvini, introduction to Tazkerat al-awliā, 1:14; Sarfarāz, Descriptive Catalogue, 60–65; Nafisi, Jostoju, 70–73, 145–67; Hellmut Ritter, "'Aṭṭār," in Encyclopaedia of Islam, 2nd ed., ed. P. Bearman et al. (Leiden: Brill Online), posted 2012, https://doi.org/10.1163/1573-3912\_islam\_COM\_0074; Ritter, "Philologika X," 156–60; Ritter, "Philologika XIV," 1–8.

In 1979, however, the poet and scholar Shafi'i-Kadkani laid out an erudite, intricate argument claiming that the Khosrow-nāma was a spurious attribution and that its preface, in which the poem's author identifies himself as 'Aṭṭār, was the work of a ninth/fifteenth-century forger.<sup>7</sup> This influential argument is now almost universally accepted, and it has conditioned nearly all of the major work on 'Aṭṭār produced since its publication. Leonard Lewisohn and Christopher Shackle, in their edited volume on 'Aṭṭār, deem Shafi'i-Kadkani's rejection of the Khosrow-nāma definitive.<sup>8</sup> Newer reference works and editions, including the third edition of the Encyclopaedia of Islam, repeat Shafi'i-Kadkani's conclusions.<sup>9</sup> Of the two most recent monographs on 'Aṭṭār, by Navid Kermani and Claudia Yaghoobi, the former dismisses the Khosrow-nāma with a citation to Shafi'i-Kadkani, and the latter fails to mention it at all.<sup>10</sup> As far as the scholarship seems to be concerned, the case is closed: the Khosrow-nāma is spurious, and it has thus justly disappeared from the arena of 'Aṭṭār studies.

Shafi'i-Kadkani's argument, however, although frequently cited as settled fact, has not been systematically evaluated.<sup>11</sup> In the present article, I will problematize Shafi'i-Kadkani's analysis and propose a more plausible scenario, in which the Khosrow-nāma is indeed an authentic work by 'Aṭṭār. Although there can be no doubting Shafi'i-Kadkani's brilliance, his argument is, as a whole, less convincing than the sum of its parts: he seems to have begun with the assumption that the Khosrow-nāma was forged, and then worked backward to determine how that could have been the case. As we shall see, his conclusions are not justified by the stylistic, religious, manuscript, and internal chronological evidence he provides. Ultimately, it is much easier to accept the Khosrow-nāma as an authentic work of 'Aṭṭār's than to imagine it was the product of a complex literary conspiracy, as Shafi'i-Kadkani proposes.

If the romance were to be accepted as an authentic work, much of the scholarship on 'Aṭṭār's life and his place in literary history would need to be rethought. One of the difficulties for 'Aṭṭār scholarship has been the dearth of biographical information, both within his

---

7. Moḥammad Reżā Shafi'i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, by Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, 2nd ed. (Tehran: Sokhan, 1389/[2010–11]), 33–59.

8. Leonard Lewisohn and Christopher Shackle, editors' introduction to Lewisohn and Shackle, Spiritual Flight, xviii. See also Hermann Landolt, "'Aṭṭār, Sufism, and Ismailism," in Lewisohn and Shackle, Spiritual Flight, 3.

9. Moḥammad Este'lāmi, introduction to Tazkerat al-awliā, by Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, rev. ed. (Tehran: Zavvār, 1383/[2004–5]), xxv; Miranşāri, Ketāb-shenāsi, 75, 232; Omid Safi, "'Aṭṭār, Farid al-Din," in Encyclopaedia of Islam, 3rd ed., ed. Kate Fleet et al. (Leiden: Brill Online), posted 2016, https://doi.org/10.1163/1573-3912\_ei3\_COM\_23976.

10. Navid Kermani, The Terror of God: Attar, Job and the Metaphysical Revolt, trans. Wieland Hoban (Cambridge: Polity Press, 2011), 30; Claudia Yaghoobi, Subjectivity in 'Aṭṭār, Persian Sufism, and European Mysticism (West Lafayette, IN: Purdue University Press, 2017).

11. 'Abd al-Ḥosayn Zarrinkub agrees with Shafi'i-Kadkani's conclusion that the Khosrow-nāma is spurious, but he criticizes some of the latter's specific arguments in a scattered fashion: Şedā-ye bāl-e simorgh (Tehran: Sokhan, 1386/[2007–8]), 69; Ḥekāyat hamchonān bāqī (Tehran: Sokhan, 1376/[1997–98]), 170–88. Cf. Shafi'i-Kadkani's response in Zabur-e pārsi: Negāhi be zendegi va ghazal-hā-ye 'Aṭṭār (Tehran: Āgāh, 1378/[1999]), 84–90.

works and in the external sources. While the Khosrow-nāma is hardly effusive on the matter, it does provide some important biographical data not found in his other works, including an account of his mother's death and some information on the chronological order of his oeuvre. Especially interesting is 'Aṭṭār's praise of one Ebn al-Rabib as his formal spiritual guide, which challenges the current consensus that 'Aṭṭār was "more of an empathetic observer of Sufism than an active exponent."<sup>12</sup> By raising the possibility of the Khosrow-nāma's authenticity, the present article aims to encourage scholars to take a fresh look at such issues, which have not been seriously reconsidered for a generation.

Even more significantly for our understanding of literary history, the Khosrow-nāma shows that 'Aṭṭār positioned himself against a wider range of poetic models than is usually thought. In contemporary scholarship, 'Aṭṭār is almost always seen as a stepping stone between Sanā'i and Rumi; this teleological reading is particularly common in the literary criticism of Shafī'i-Kadkani himself.<sup>13</sup> The composition of the Khosrow-nāma, however, complicates this picture and suggests he was working not just against Sanā'i but also against versifiers of romantic tales such as Gorgāni, 'Ayyuqi, and even Neẓāmi. Indeed, if the Khosrow-nāma is authentic, then 'Aṭṭār composed five maṣnavis, perhaps the earliest imitation of the khamsa.<sup>14</sup> The investigation into possible intertextual linkages between 'Aṭṭār and Neẓāmi has only barely begun, and I hope that this article will set the stage for wider-ranging analysis of 'Aṭṭār's literary models and his relationship to the romantic tradition.<sup>15</sup> Finally, 'Aṭṭār's authorship of the Khosrow-nāma troubles reductive notions of "mystical poetry" and "mystical poets," essentializing categories that have come to dominate discussions of 'Aṭṭār and that likely motivated the excision of the Khosrow-nāma from his oeuvre in the first place.

A Little Romance

The romance in question is most commonly known as the Khosrow-nāma, but it also circulated under the titles Gol o Khosrow, Gol o Hermez, and Hermez o Golrokh, in reference to the tale's two principal lovers—Gol also being known as Golrokh, and Hermez being the name given to Khosrow by his foster parents.<sup>16</sup> Although his name is often voweled as Hormoz in modern scholarship, it frequently rhymes with words such as hargez and ājez, meaning that its final vowel must be "e."<sup>17</sup> Shafī'i-Kadkani further suggests that the

12. Kermani, Terror of God, 26.

13. Shafī'i-Kadkani, introduction to Manṭeq al-ṭayr, 38; Shafī'i-Kadkani, Zabur, 19–20.

14. 'Aṭṭār wrote maṣnavis only in the hazaj and ramal meters, so his five works, unlike later formal imitations, do not metrically match those of Neẓāmi.

15. Barāt Zanĵāni, "Ḥakim Neẓāmi-ye Ganjavi va Shaykh Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār," Āyanda 2, no. 9 (Ordibehesht 1362/[April–May 1983]): 106–14.

16. Titles of this format (X and Y) are common for the romance genre: see Cameron Cross, "The Poetics of Romantic Love in Vis & Rāmin" (PhD diss., University of Chicago, 2015), 104.

17. Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār (attrib.), Khosrow-nāma, ed. Aḥmad Sohayli-Khwānsāri (Tehran: Anjoman-e Āṣār-e Melli, 1339/[1961–62]), lines 1057, 1317. All references to the printed edition of the Khosrow-nāma are to Sohayli-Khwānsāri's edition.

name should be fully voweled as Hermez, which he links to the Greek name Hermes. This reading would be consistent with the Hellenistic roots of the romance genre as well as the geography of the story, which shifts between Constantinople and Khuzestān.<sup>18</sup> (One should note, however, that the name Hermes is usually transliterated with an “s,” not a “z,” in medieval Arabic and Persian).

The Khosrow-nāma trades in narrative structures and topoi that are characteristic of a group of fifth/eleventh-century Persian verse romances—including Varqa o Golshāh, Vis o Rāmin, and Vāmeq o ‘Azrā—and that bear a striking resemblance to the Greek novels of the early Common Era. Both traditions can be traced back to the syncretic literary milieu of the eastern Mediterranean during the Achaemenid and Hellenistic periods, which was characterized by a cross-fertilization of stories, narremes, and tropes between Greek and Persian literary cultures. In general, the heroes and heroines of these romances (whether written in Greek or in Persian) are young, of noble lineage, and hopelessly in love. They are separated by force or chance, and the bulk of the story is devoted to their quest to reunite and (especially in the woman’s case) to maintain their chastity. Once reunited, they marry and live out the rest of their lives in happiness. Within this basic plot, numerous topoi and narrative structures reappear. The story often begins with the protagonists’ conception; as youths they fall in love at first sight; they are afflicted by shipwrecks, imprisonment, and bandits; the woman, and sometimes also the man, is repeatedly propositioned and/or threatened by sexual violence but escapes with chastity intact; to evade danger, they often disguise themselves, and readers are treated to numerous scenes involving failed recognition and revelation. The lovers’ peregrinations take them all over the eastern Mediterranean, reflecting the cultural heterogeneity and literary syncretism of the genre’s origins.<sup>19</sup>

The Khosrow-nāma fits very comfortably into this generic model. The story begins with the Qayṣar (Caesar) of Rum, who has great wealth and power but no son. He owns a beautiful slave girl, and after a tryst she becomes pregnant, but Qayṣar must leave to fight invaders immediately after their encounter, so he does not learn of her pregnancy. The baby, who is born while the king is away, is named Khosrow; or, to be more exact, “They gave that heart-stealer a name in Greek [rumi] / Which in the Persian [pārsi] language is ‘Khosrow-shāh.’”<sup>20</sup> The infant is then spirited out of the country to Khuzestān by a loyal servant to protect him from a cabal. He is raised by the king of Khuzestān’s gardener, who gives him the name Hermez. He grows up to be a strapping young man, an expert in all realms of knowledge and skilled in the arts of war. One day, Gol, the princess of Khuzestān, is strolling on the roof of the palace, and she catches sight of Hermez napping in the garden and immediately falls in love. But she has already been promised in marriage to the king of Isfahan, and when she

18. Shafī‘i-Kadkani, Zabur, 101. Vāmeq o ‘Azrā also includes Greek names that were transliterated into the Perso-Arabic script: see Bo Utas, “Did ‘Adhrā Remain a Virgin?,” Orientalia Suecana 3335 (1984–86): 429–41.

19. Dick Davis, Panthea’s Children: Hellenistic Novels and Medieval Persian Romances (New York: Bibliotheca Persica, 2002); Cross, “Poetics of Romantic Love,” 94–135; Tomas Hägg, “The Oriental Reception of Greek Novels: A Survey with Some Preliminary Considerations,” Symbolae Osloenses 61, no. 1 (1986): 99–131.

20. ‘Aṭṭār (attrib.), Khosrow-nāma, Bibliothèque nationale de France, Supplément persan 1434 (hereafter cited as BnF 1434), fol. 28v. Cf. Sohayli-Khwānsāri’s printed edition, line 882.

has her father call off the marriage, the former raises an army to take her by force. Thus begins a long set of adventures featuring cannibals, bandits, disguises, cross-dressing, love triangles, betrayal, shipwrecks, and daring escapes. Although Gol and Khosrow are reunited at several points, circumstances always conspire to quickly separate them again. When Khosrow finally manages to defeat the king of Isfahan at the end of the story, the lovers are married in Constantinople along with several other couples of supporting characters who variously aided (and sometimes opposed) them during their trials, and they live happily for thirty more years until their deaths.<sup>21</sup> ‘Aṭṭār lists a work titled Khosrow-nāma as one of his own in the preface to the Mokhtār-nāma, and the author of the Khosrow-nāma identifies himself as ‘Aṭṭār in the preface to the romance. However, Shafi‘i-Kadkani claims that the romance’s preface is a ninth/fifteenth-century forgery that was fraudulently attached to the poem. He points out that just as the Mokhtār-nāma’s preface refers to the Khosrow-nāma as a completed work, so too does the Khosrow-nāma’s preface refer to the Mokhtār-nāma as a completed work. This fact leads to a chicken-and-egg problem that, according to Shafi‘i-Kadkani, no possible chronology could plausibly explain. On the basis of stylistic, religious, and manuscript evidence, he further argues for a ninth/fifteenth-century provenance for the poem and its allegedly forged preface. As for ‘Aṭṭār’s inclusion of the Khosrow-nāma in his list of previous titles, Shafi‘i-Kadkani reasons that the mention refers not to the romance in question but to the Elāhi-nāma, the authorship of which is not in doubt. He suggests that this mystical-didactic maṣnavi was originally known as the Khosrow-nāma and only later came to circulate under its present title.

Shafi‘i-Kadkani first advanced his argument in 1979 in the introduction to his edition of the Mokhtār-nāma. Since then, he has introduced several complicating lines of argumentation, first in 1999 in Zabur-e pārsi and more recently in 2008 in his introduction to his edition of the Elāhi-nāma.<sup>22</sup> These later additions and revisions are less systematic than the original argument, however, and it is not always clear how they are meant to be integrated into his previous claims. The 1979 version of his argument remains the most comprehensive and the most widely cited, so we must deal with its claims directly. Over the course of the following discussion, however, I will also mention the later variations and conclusions wherever relevant.

Manuscript Evidence

Many of ‘Aṭṭār’s authentic works exist in manuscripts dated as early as the end of the seventh/thirteenth century. According to Shafi‘i-Kadkani, however, the earliest manuscripts of the Khosrow-nāma do not appear until the ninth/fifteenth century, suggesting a much later composition; he further argues that this is consistent with the romance’s stylistic and

---

21. For a detailed summary of the entire tale, see Sohayli-Khwānsārī’s introduction to the Khosrow-nāma, v–xxv; Ritter, “Philologika X,” 161–71.

22. Shafi‘i-Kadkani, Zabur, 96–101; Moḥammad Reżā Shafi‘i-Kadkani, introduction to Elāhi-nāma, by Farid al-Din ‘Aṭṭār, 2nd ed. (Tehran: Sokhan, 1388/[2009–10]), 48–63.

religious content, which also point to a ninth/fifteenth-century provenance.<sup>23</sup> The allegedly late appearance of the Khosrow-nāma relative to ‘Aṭṭār’s other works does seem a strong reason to be suspicious of its authenticity. But Shafi‘i-Kadkani’s reading of the manuscript evidence is incomplete. In particular, he overlooks an early manuscript of the Khosrow-nāma held by the Bibliothèque nationale de France, which bears a colophon stating that it was completed on 29 Shawwāl 696/August 27, 1297, in line with the earliest manuscripts of ‘Aṭṭār’s undisputed works.<sup>24</sup> Shafi‘i-Kadkani cites only the handlist of Aḥmad Monzavi for his information on these manuscripts, and Monzavi does not include this early copy.<sup>25</sup> Nevertheless, it is surprising that Shafi‘i-Kadkani was not aware of it, since it served, along with the 1878 Lucknow lithograph, as the basis for Ritter’s discussion of the poem in his seminal 1939 article on ‘Aṭṭār.<sup>26</sup>

Written in a rough but legible naskh, this modest manuscript was likely produced for sale or for a minor collector, not a royal patron. It displays the archaic spellings that one would expect from a manuscript of this age, such as ki for ke, and it does not distinguish between the letters be and pe, jim and che, or kāf and gāf. Final yay is written with two points above the letter. The postvocalic zāl, which was fading over the course of the seventh/thirteenth century, has not been retained.<sup>27</sup> The text is framed by a rule-border of double red lines. According to Blochet’s handlist, several of its folios were redone in the nineteenth century, and a dozen of its folios do seem to have been written in a different, and likely much later, hand; they are fully pointed and lack the rule-border.<sup>28</sup> The first three folios also appear to have been rewritten at some point. Although they more closely resemble the original in terms of style, they are much sloppier, and the rule-border seems to have been drawn freely without the aid of a straightedge.<sup>29</sup> Finally, a pair of folios closer to the end of the manuscript were written in yet another hand. They lack the rule-border, and the hemistichs are separated by (usually) three red marks.<sup>30</sup> The Arabic colophon appears to be written in the same hand as the original folios, with its distinctive ligatures between yay and nun and slating points, although it is more compact than the surrounding Persian text. The scribe may, therefore, have recut the pen before writing the colophon, or he may have focused more intently on his work as he switched from Persian to Arabic and from text to paratext.

23. Shafi‘i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 55–56.

24. BnF 1434, fol. 233r. I have examined the manuscript in digital reproduction, which can be accessed online at <http://archivesetmanuscrits.bnf.fr/ark:/12148/cc1006349>.

25. Aḥmad Monzavi, Fehrest-e noskha-hā-ye fārsi-ye khaṭṭi (Tehran: Mo’assasa-ye Farhangi-ye Manṭeqa, 1348–51/[1969–72]), 4:3084–85.

26. Ritter, “Philologika X,” 144–46. Ritter treats the manuscript as an authentic early copy, although he hedges somewhat by initially introducing it as “supposedly (angeblich) written in 696 h” (145).

27. Ludwig Paul, “Persian Language i. Early New Persian,” in Encyclopaedia Iranica, online ed., ed. Ehsan Yarshater, updated November 19, 2013, <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/persian-language-1-early-new-persian>.

28. E. Blochet, Catalogue des manuscrits persans (Paris: Réunion des bibliothèques nationales, 1905–34), 3:87–88; BnF 1434, fols. 80r–91v.

29. BnF 1434, fols. 1r–3v.

30. Ibid., fols. 186r–187v.

In any case, there is no indication that the colophon has been altered, and the original folios are stylistically consistent with a late seventh/thirteenth-century provenance (fig. 1).

Figure 1. Conclusion and colophon of BnF 1434, fol. 233r. Image courtesy of Bibliothèque nationale de France.

‘Ali Miranṣāri, who accepts the argument for the Khosrow-nāma’s spuriousness, lists this manuscript in his bibliographical survey of ‘Aṭṭār’s works but quotes Blochet’s comment that some of its folios were rewritten in the nineteenth century. He claims, on this basis, that the alleged date of composition is not trustworthy.<sup>31</sup> These later folios, however, are clearly identifiable, and the vast majority of the manuscript appears original and unaltered, including the preface (with the exception of the title page and the first two folios) and the final page with the colophon.

On its own, of course, the existence of this manuscript does not prove that the Khosrow-nāma was composed by ‘Aṭṭār. Likewise, we should note that for most of ‘Aṭṭār’s undisputed works, several manuscripts exist from the seventh/thirteenth and eighth/fourteenth centuries, whereas the Khosrow-nāma is attested only by this single copy.<sup>32</sup> Nevertheless, the Bibliothèque nationale manuscript shows that the Khosrow-nāma cannot be a product of the ninth/fifteenth century, as Shafī‘i-Kadkani claims in the 1979 version of his argument, since it was already circulating in the seventh/thirteenth century. In 1999, by contrast, Shafī‘i-Kadkani allowed that the romance may have been composed as early as the seventh/thirteenth century, but he still insisted that the work’s preface was a later forgery attached to the poem during the eighth/fourteenth or ninth/fifteenth century.<sup>33</sup> However, this chronology, too, is disproved by the BnF manuscript, since it shows that the complete preface was already attached to the poem by the end of the seventh/thirteenth century. The BnF manuscript thus brings ‘Aṭṭār’s authorship back into the realm of possibility, at least from a chronological perspective.

Even though the romance and its preface were circulating in the late seventh/thirteenth century, their attribution to ‘Aṭṭār may still very well be spurious. And even though this manuscript shows that Shafī‘i-Kadkani’s dating of the poem and its preface to the ninth/fifteenth century on the basis of stylistic and religious evidence was incorrect, there may still be good reasons to dismiss the attribution to ‘Aṭṭār on such grounds. We must therefore carefully consider the stylistic and religious evidence, along with the alleged “contradictions” in the Khosrow-nāma’s preface.

An Ouroboric Oeuvre

Ironically, one of the main points adduced by Shafī‘i-Kadkani to prove the Khosrow-nāma’s spuriousness is one that led Ritter to believe that the work was authentic: it references ‘Aṭṭār’s undisputed works, and it is referenced by those undisputed works in turn. More specifically, in the introduction to his collection of quatrains, the Mokhtār-nāma, ‘Aṭṭār enumerates his works and includes the title Khosrow-nāma in the list; likewise, the author of the Khosrow-nāma provides a similar enumeration in the preface to the romance, claiming the Mokhtār-nāma and other authentic works of ‘Aṭṭār as his own. As Shafī‘i-Kadkani points out, however, acceptance of these statements at face value creates a chicken-and-egg problem that plagues any attempt to reconstruct the chronology of

31. Miranṣāri, Ketāb-shenāsi, 234.

32. Shafī‘i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 55.

33. Shafī‘i-Kadkani, Zabur, 99–100.

‘Aṭṭār’s oeuvre. If ‘Aṭṭār finished the Khosrow-nāma before the Mokhtār-nāma, how could he reference the latter? And if he finished it after the Mokhtār-nāma, how could he mention it in the latter as a completed and disseminated poem? Shafī‘i-Kadkani concludes that this “contradiction between the two introductions shows that the existing Khosrow-nāma . . . cannot be the Khosrow-nāma mentioned in the Mokhtār-nāma.”<sup>34</sup> This circular situation, however, can also be explained by the fact that medieval authors would often disseminate multiple versions of their poems, revising and rewriting them even after their initial “publication.” Such a solution was briefly proposed by Ritter in 1939, and, as I will argue here, it provides a more likely explanation for this literary ouroboros than does the theory of a later forgery.<sup>35</sup>

The Khosrow-nāma’s preface mentions the Mokhtār-nāma twice while recounting its own two-stage composition. According to an introductory section entitled “On the Reason for the Expounding of the Story” (Dar sabab-e sharḥ dādan-e qeṣṣa), the author was persuaded to compose the romance one spring night while sitting with a group of friends.<sup>36</sup> As the author tells it, one of his companions that night was something of a fanatic for his poetry; whenever the companion heard one of his verses, he would swoon or dance in ecstatic bewilderment as he contemplated its meaning.<sup>37</sup> This friend had memorized more than one hundred of his qaṣidas as well as nearly one thousand ghazals and qeṭ‘as, and he was constantly quoting the Javāher-nāma and Sharḥ al-qalb. Most relevant for our present purposes, he had also memorized “the entire Mokhtār-nāma of quatrains.”<sup>38</sup> These titles, of course, support the conclusion that the author who is speaking is Farid al-Din ‘Aṭṭār, as does the fact that he explicitly calls himself “‘Aṭṭār” at various points in the poem.<sup>39</sup> On that night, this particular friend allegedly implored ‘Aṭṭār, who had apparently taken a three-year hiatus from versifying, to start composing poetry again.<sup>40</sup> More specifically, he recommended that ‘Aṭṭār versify a prose romance from one Badr-e Ahvāzi.<sup>41</sup> Dehkhoda speculates that this may be the same Ahvāzi mentioned by Nāṣer-e Khosrow, who compares this Ahvāzi unfavorably with himself, insinuating that the former’s poetry is devoid of religious wisdom.<sup>42</sup> In any case, since much of the Khosrow-nāma’s action takes place in Khuzestān, it makes sense that its source would be associated with Ahvāz, a major city in the region. ‘Aṭṭār reports that his friend urged him to versify the story and thus make it new: “String the pearls of this speech beautifully on the thread / Make this old soul new

34. Shafī‘i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 39.

35. Ritter, “Philologika X,” 155.

36. BnF 1434, fol. 20r. In the printed edition, the heading reads “The Reason for the Versification of the Book” (Sabab-e naẓm-e ketāb); ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, 28.

37. ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, lines 601–2.

38. Ibid., lines 603.

39. Ibid., lines 2261, 5349, 6069, 8260, 8267.

40. Ibid., line 614.

41. Ibid., line 617.

42. ‘Ali Akbar Dehkhodā, Loḡhat-nāma-ye Dehkhodā, ed. Moḡammad Mo‘in and Ja‘far Shahidi (Tehran: Enteshārāt-e Dāneshgāh-e Tehrān, 1373/[1993–94]), s.v. “Ahvāzi.”

with meaning.”<sup>43</sup> He immediately saw the wisdom in his friend’s request and began setting verses down on paper.

But this was only the first stage of the poem’s composition. The next section of the introduction, entitled “The Extraction of the Tale” (entekhāb kardan-e dāstān) details events that took place an indeterminate amount of time later, when some version of the Khosrow-nāma was already circulating.<sup>44</sup> According to the author, he was approached by a friend (whether this is the same friend who initially suggested the project is unclear) who criticized the poem for its excessive length and because it shared some of its homiletic content with the Asrār-nāma:

I had a friend, to whom had accrued many benefits
Of the soul; he was devoted to my verse.
He said to me: “The Khosrow-nāma is, today,
Endowed with a heart-illuminating, royal brilliance.
Although the story is delightful—
What can I say: shorter is better; it’s long!
If you would abbreviate this story,
No thorn would remain in this garden.
On the path, husks and kernels are two obstacles;
If you would choose just the essential oils, it would be better.
The tawhīd, praise, wisdom, and proverbs
That were first found in the Khosrow-nāma
You have placed in the Asrār-nāma as well,
So you have begun the same thing in two places!”

|   |                               |
|---|-------------------------------|
| بجان در کار من بسته دلی داشت              | رفیقی داشتیم کو حاصلی داشت    |
| فروغی خسروی دارد دلفروز                   | مرا گفتا چو خسرونامه امروز    |
| چگویم قصه کوتاه به درازست                 | اگر چه قصه‌ای بس دلنواز است   |
| نماند هیچ خار این بوستان را               | اگر موجز کنی این داستان را    |
| همه روغن گزینی نغز باشد                   | دو بند راه قشر و مغز باشد     |
| که خسرونامه را بود اول حال                | دگر توحید و نعت و بند و امثال |
| دو موضع کرده‌ای یک چیز آغاز <sup>45</sup> | چو در اسرارنامه گفته‌ای باز   |

In other words, the Khosrow-nāma was too long, and some of the proverbs, religious praise, and homiletic material that it originally contained were later reused in the Asrār-nāma. The passage can even be read as implying that some of the romance’s verses were repeated verbatim in the later didactic maṣnavī, perhaps in its opening doxology, which is conventionally dominated by this kind of content. Since the two poems share the same meter, it would have been easy to recycle lines from the former into the latter.

43. ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, line 626.

44. BnF 1434, fol. 22r. In the printed edition, the section is titled “On the Completion of the Story” (Dar pardākhtan-e in dāstān); ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, 32.

45. BnF 1434, fol. 22v; cf. ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, lines 650–56.

The author of the Khosrow-nāma took this call for revision to heart, extracting a section (bāb) from each chapter (faṣl) and then stringing these “pearls of wisdom” together from the beginning with a new introductory doxology:

Because he spoke the truth of this story beautifully,
I did, in short, just what he said.
I extracted a selection from over here,
I removed a section from every chapter.
I composed separate verses of tawḥīd and praise,
And then I strung the pearls of wisdom from the beginning.
If there was any defect in its brocade,
I repaired it from that state.
Some verses that were renowned like gold
I melted down in the furnace for golden ink.

|  |                               |
|--|-------------------------------|
| چنان کردم همی القصه کو گفت             | چو او این قصه را الحق نکو گفت |
| بر آوردم ز یک یک فصل بابی              | برون کردم از اینجا انتخابی    |
| ز سر در در حکمت نیز سفتم               | جدا نعتی و توحیدی بگفتم       |
| بگردانیدم از طرزی که آن داشت           | وگر چیزی طرازش را زیان داشت   |
| در آتش بردمش تا آب زر شد <sup>46</sup> | سخن بعضی که چون زر نامور شد   |

Although more thorough philological work needs to be done, all known manuscripts of the Khosrow-nāma seem to reflect these revisions; the earlier version of the poem does not appear to have been preserved, or at least it has not yet been identified.<sup>47</sup> It thus probably did not enjoy wide circulation, since otherwise the author could not have suppressed it so completely. Although he claims that some of the verses in the first version of the Khosrow-nāma had gained wide currency before he set about revising the poem (“some verses... were renowned like gold”), the actual text was likely circulating only within a small community of his associates.

Finally, at the end of the section, the author again mentions his various other poems, including the Mokhtār-nāma. Such enumerations served an important function by informing readers about the author’s other works and encouraging them to seek them out—a manuscript version of the “also by this author” page found at the back of many mass-market paperbacks:

46. BnF 1434, fol. 22v; cf. ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, lines 661–65.

47. B. Reinert, “‘Aṭṭār, Farīd-al-Dīn,” in Encyclopaedia Iranica, online ed., ed. Ehsan Yarshater, updated August 17, 2011, <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/attar-farid-al-din-poet>; Ritter, “Philologika X,” 144–46; François de Blois and C.A. Storey, Persian Literature: A Bio-Bibliographical Survey (London: Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, 1992–94), 5.2:276. Several catalogers note highly abridged versions of the romance, but they are all quite late, and those that Ritter has examined all contain the same two-part story of the poem’s composition. He thus believes that these abridgments reflect later editorial undertakings and do not represent an authorial version. Compare, for example, BnF 1434 with the later (and shorter) recension of the poem contained in BnF Supplément persan 811 (dated 1013/1605). Also see Bodleian, Elliott 204, and Asiatic Society of Bengal, 477, manuscripts that contain both the full Khosrow-nāma as it exists today and a much shorter précis.

The Moşibat-nāma is the sorrow of the world,
The Elāhi-nāma's secrets are manifest.
I began both of them in the apothecary,
And—what can I say—I finished both quickly.
There were five hundred patients in the apothecary,
Every day, for me to take their pulse.
Among all the things that I've heard and said,
I've seen no speech better than this.
If there is any fault, cover it up;
If you won't praise me, at least stay silent.
Through the Moşibat-nāma, atoms are animated,
The Elāhi-nāma is the treasure of kings.
The Asrār-nāma is the world of gnosis,
The Mokhtār-nāma is paradise for the people of the heart.
And as for the Maqāmāt-e ʔoyur [i.e., Manṭeq al-ṭayr], it is like
An ascension of the soul for the bird of love.
Because the Khosrow-nāma has a wondrous nature,
Both the noble and the common have a share in it.

|  |                              |
|--|------------------------------|
| الهينامه كاسرارش عيان است                  | مصيبتنامه كاندوه جهان است    |
| چگويم زود رستم زان و زين باز               | بداروخانه كردم هر دو آغاز    |
| كه در هر روز نبضم مي نمودند                | بداروخانه پانصد شخص بودند    |
| سخن را به ازين رويي نديدم                  | ميان آن همه گفت و شنيدم      |
| چو تحسين نكنيم باري خموشي                  | اگر عيبي بود گر عيب پوشي     |
| الهينامه گنج خسروان است                    | مصيبتنامه را دزه روان است    |
| بهشت اهل دل مختارنامهست                    | جهان معرفت اسرارنامهست       |
| كه مرغ عشق را معراج جان است                | مقامات طيور اما چنان است     |
| ز طرز او كه و مه را نصيب است <sup>48</sup> | چو خسرونامه را طرزي عجيب است |

We thus have a situation in which the Khosrow-nāma references the Mokhtār-nāma twice by name as a finished work, just as the Mokhtār-nāma cites the Khosrow-nāma as a finished work; this leads to a “contradiction” that, according to Shafī‘i-Kadkani, indicates the latter’s spuriousness as a work by ‘Aṭṭār. These circular cross-references, however, are not necessarily a sign of the Khosrow-nāma’s forgery; they can also be explained by the complex, multi-staged process in which works of the manuscript age were revised and circulated in new forms. Sanā‘i, for instance, circulated multiple drafts of his Ḥadiqa, and Najm al-Din Dāya revised, retitled, and repackaged his Merṣād al-‘ebād for a new patron.<sup>49</sup> Most significantly for our purposes, ‘Aṭṭār himself testifies in the introduction to

48. BnF 1434, fols. 22v–23r; cf. ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, lines 266–74.

49. J. T. P. de Bruijn, Of Piety and Poetry: The Interaction of Religion and Literature in the Life and Works of Ḥakīm Sanā‘ī of Ghazna (Leiden: Brill, 1983), 119–39; Barbara Flemming, “From Archetype to Oral Tradition: Editing Persian and Turkish Literary Texts,” Manuscripts of the Middle East 3 (1998): 7–11; Franklin Lewis, “The Modes of Literary Production: Remarks on the Composition, Revision and ‘Publication’ of Persian Texts in the the Mokhtār-nāma that he altered several of his works after their initial “publication.” For example, he explains that his divān originally contained three thousand quatrains, but at the urging of his friends, he created a new recension from which he removed all but five hundred. Of the excised quatrains, he organized two thousand in the Mokhtār-nāma and destroyed five hundred that “were not fit for this world.”<sup>50</sup> Similarly, ‘Aṭṭār refers to his Javāher-nāma and Sharḥ al-qalb as completed works in the Tazkerat al-awliā, directing readers to them for further commentary on the sayings of the saints.<sup>51</sup> In the Mokhtār-nāma, however, we learn that ‘Aṭṭār destroyed these two poems at some later point.<sup>52</sup> Thus, in the cases of the divān, the Sharḥ al-qalb, and the Javāher-nāma, ‘Aṭṭār circulated finished works within his textual community in Nishapur before making further revisions or suppressing them entirely. The fact that ‘Aṭṭār was able to control “published” texts in this way testifies to their limited circulation, the small size of his textual community, and the influence that ‘Aṭṭār likely held as a spiritual leader. Given this background, the account of the Khosrow-nāma’s two-staged composition no longer seems illogical, contradictory, or far-fetched. The request from a friend is a common topos that need not be taken literally, but the preface’s description of initial circulation followed by revision and a second “publication” not only is possible but also accords well with what we know of ‘Aṭṭār’s literary habits from his other works.

On the basis of ‘Aṭṭār’s testimony and literary cross-references, one can even construct a relative chronology for his oeuvre that would explain how the present versions of the Mokhtār-nāma and the Khosrow-nāma both came to cite each other as finished works. Ritter proposed one such possible chronology in 1939; I offer a similar one here that incorporates data from the Tazkerat al-awliā:<sup>53</sup>

1. Divān [first recension], Sharḥ al-qalb, Javāher-nāma
2. Khosrow-nāma [first recension]
3. Manteq al-ṭayr, Moṣibat-nāma, Asrār-nāma<sup>54</sup>

---

Medieval Period,” Persica 17 (2001): 69–83.

50. Farid al-Din ‘Aṭṭār, Mokhtār-nāma, ed. Moḥammad Rezā Shafī‘i-Kadkani, 2nd ed. (Tehran: Sokhan, 1389/[2010–11]), 71. On the composition of the Mokhtār-nāma, see Austin O’Malley, “Poetry and Pedagogy: The Homiletic Verse of Farid al-Din ‘Aṭṭār” (PhD diss., University of Chicago, 2017), 58–68. It should be noted that none of the existing manuscripts of the divān contain anything near five hundred quatrains, and most contain none at all. ‘Aṭṭār’s second authorial recension thus must have undergone further revisions, either by ‘Aṭṭār or at the hands of later scribes.

51. Farid al-Din ‘Aṭṭār, Tazkerat al-awliā, ed. Moḥammad Este‘lāmi, rev. ed. (Tehran: Zavvār, 1383/[2004–5]), 4, 466.

52. ‘Aṭṭār, Mokhtār-nāma, 70.

53. Ritter, “Philologika X,” 151–52.

54. Some manuscripts of the Manteq al-ṭayr contain a verse claiming that the poem was completed in the late sixth/twelfth century. The verse does not appear in most manuscripts, however, including the earliest ones, and the actual date given in the manuscripts varies from 570/1174–75 to 583/1187–88. Most scholars therefore reject it as an interpolation. (On the other hand, it is difficult to see what would motivate a scribe to insert such a line.) See De Blois and Storey, Persian Literature, 5.2:281; Badi‘ al-Zamān Foruzānfar, Sharḥ-e aḥvāl va naqd va taḥlil-e āṣār-e Shaykh Farid al-Din Moḥammad ‘Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi (Tehran: Chāp-khāna-ye Dāneshgāh,

4. Tazkerat al-awliā<sup>55</sup>
5. Destruction of the Sharḥ al-qalb and the Javāher-nāma
6. Revision of the divān and compilation of the Mokhtār-nāma
7. Elāhi-nāma
8. Revision of the Khosrow-nāma

The first recension of the Khosrow-nāma was allegedly composed at the instigation of a friend who often quoted the Sharḥ al-qalb and the Javāher-nāma, and who had memorized a large number of poems from the divān and all of the quatrains of the Mokhtār-nāma. The Sharḥ al-qalb and Javāher-nāma must therefore have already been written, and likely some textual version of the divān had been, too. The reference to the Mokhtār-nāma is more problematic because, at this point, the quatrains did not yet exist as a separate work outside of the divān. As Ritter suggests, however, there is a plausible explanation: if we accept the author's account of his revisions to the Khosrow-nāma, the reference to the Mokhtār-nāma could have been inserted during that process (indeed, the entire preface may have been reworked at that time) as a way of referring to the quatrains as a totality.<sup>56</sup> The aforementioned friend does not seem to have been familiar with 'Aṭṭār's mystical-didactic maṣnavīs, so they were likely written after the first version of the Khosrow-nāma. The Tazkerat al-awliā is also difficult to place relative to the other works, but because it cites the Sharḥ al-qalb as if the latter still existed, it must have been compiled before that work's destruction. The Mokhtār-nāma, on the other hand, mentions the suppression of the Sharḥ al-qalb and the Javāher-nāma, so it must have been compiled after the Tazkerat al-awliā. According to the Mokhtār-nāma's preface, it was produced simultaneously with a new textual recension of the divān, and it references the Khosrow-nāma (which would have still been in its unrevised form), the Manṭeq al-ṭayr, the Moṣibat-nāma, and the Asrār-nāma as completed works. 'Aṭṭār then produced the Elāhi-nāma, which is not mentioned in the Mokhtār-nāma, before revising the Khosrow-nāma, in which he names the Mokhtār-nāma and all of the completed ethical-didactic maṣnavīs.

Such a career arc is consistent with the practices of poets with whom we are more familiar. Generally speaking, premodern Persian poets tend to begin with the monorhyme forms, which they continue to compose throughout their careers, and later in life turn to maṣnavīs along with the curation of earlier output.<sup>57</sup> 'Aṭṭār may have even anticipated that his reworking of the Khosrow-nāma would be his final work, and this fact (along with issues of genre) may explain why he was more willing to mention his previous titles in this poem 1339/[1960–61]; repr., Tehran: Āsim, 1389/[2010–11]), 61–63; Ritter, “Philologika XIV,” 50–56; Shafi'i-Kadkani, introduction to Manṭeq al-ṭayr, 74.

---

55. It is also possible that the Tazkerat al-awliā was compiled before the Asrār-nāma, the Moṣibat-nāma, and the Manṭeq al-ṭayr, or even before the first recension of the Khosrow-nāma. All that is certain is that it must have been compiled after the composition of the Sharḥ al-qalb, but before its destruction.

56. Ritter, “Philologika X,” 151–52.

57. Such a career trajectory is also consistent with Shafi'i-Kadkani's dating of the maṣnavīs—he argues that they were written after 'Awfi's visit to Nishapur in 1206–7, when, by his reckoning, 'Aṭṭār had likely already entered late middle age. See Shafi'i-Kadkani, introduction to Manṭeq al-ṭayr, 72–74.

than he had been in his other maṣnavīs: at the end of his literary (and earthly) career, he felt the need to lay out his literary estate.<sup>58</sup>

It is thus chronologically possible for ʿAṭṭār to have written the Khosrow-nāma, both in terms of the manuscript tradition and in view of the development of his own oeuvre. Nevertheless, we may still be compelled to dismiss the traditional attribution for other reasons. In particular, Shafiʿi-Kadkani argues that the Khosrow-nāma's literary style and religious outlook are inconsistent with ʿAṭṭār's literary and religious habits as known from his undisputed works. As we shall see, however, these arguments are also less convincing than they first appear.

Religious Reasons

According to Shafiʿi-Kadkani, the introduction to the Khosrow-nāma contains terms and concepts derived from Ebn ʿArabi's mysticism that are characteristic of a later period of Persian literary history; this, he argues, proves the introduction's ninth/fifteenth-century provenance and thus its spuriousness. However, although Ebn ʿArabi is often thought to mark a sharp dividing line in the history of mystical thought, he did not arise in a vacuum, and the terms and concepts that he developed were already percolating in the preceding centuries. Indeed, many of the ostensibly Akbarian terms and concepts identified by Shafiʿi-Kadkani in the Khosrow-nāma are, in fact, present in ʿAṭṭār's undisputed works as well. Their presence, as we shall see, is consistent with ʿAṭṭār's own style and religious outlook and thus does not necessitate a later provenance.

There are several passages in the Khosrow-nāma that allegedly exemplify the Islamic philosophical-mystical concept of "the unity of being" (waḥdat al-wujūd); although Ebn ʿArabi himself never uses this term, he is seen as the intellectual fountainhead of the idea that it represents—namely, that divine unity underlies all creation.<sup>59</sup> Such an attitude is certainly evident in some of the verses in the Khosrow-nāma, although we must note that, as far as these things go, the verses in question are rather tame. The following is perhaps the most direct example:

Of the unity of the two worlds there is no doubt,
Since the true being is only one.
There is God, and creation is but the light of God,
But His light is never separate from Him.
There is God and the light of God. What else is there?
We must say God; besides God who could there be?
Behind the curtain there is only one idol-image,
Even if the light has a thousand forms.

---

58. Although he does not mention his other titles in his ethical-didactic maṣnavīs, ʿAṭṭār has no problem discussing his output in his prose introductions to the Tazkerat al-awliā and the Mokhtār-nāma.

59. William Chittick, "Rumi and Waḥdat al-wujūd," in Poetry and Mysticism in Islam: The Heritage of Rumi, ed. Amin Banani, Richard G. Hovannisian, and Georges Sabagh (New York: Cambridge University Press, 1994), 62.

|  |  |
|--|--|
| که موجود حقیقی جز یکی نیستولی زو نور او هرگز جدا نیستبباید گفت حق جز حق دگر کیستولی در پرده یک صورت نگارست <sup>60</sup> | در آن وحدت دو عالم را شکی نیستخداست و خلق جز نور خدا نیستحقت و نور حق چیزی دگر چیستاگر آن نور را صورت هزارست |
|--|--|

These verses explain worldly multiplicity as a manifestation of divine unity, a conceptualization that Shafī'i-Kadkani considers foreign to the work of 'Aṭṭār, who, in his view, maintains a sharp separation between creator and creation.<sup>60</sup> Although the "unity of being" is certainly not the dominant metaphysics of 'Aṭṭār's works, he does, in fact, often meditate on the fundamental unity of all existence. For example, compare the above passage with the following quotation from the Manṭeq al-ṭayr's doxology:

Look, this world and that world are Him;
There is nothing other than Him, and if there were, it would be Him!
Everything is one essence, just elaborated;
Everything is one word with different vocalizations.

|   |   |
|---|---|
| نیست غیر او وگر هست آن هم اوستجمله یک حرف و عبارت مختلف <sup>62</sup> | در نگر کاین عالم و آن عالم اوستجمله یک ذات است اما متصف |
|---|---|

There are several other instances in 'Aṭṭār's undisputed works in which he treats this allegedly Akbarian theme of God's coextension with His creation.<sup>62</sup>

Shafī'i-Kadkani further argues that the author of the Khosrow-nāma uses specific terms derived from Ebn 'Arabi's metaphysics of divine names, in particular "the named" (mosammā) and "the names" (asmā), indicating God's essence and its refraction in the world.<sup>63</sup> But these terms, too, appear several times in 'Aṭṭār's undisputed works with similar metaphysical significance.<sup>64</sup> This is not to suggest that 'Aṭṭār read Ebn 'Arabi, who composed his major works after 'Aṭṭār's probable death date.<sup>65</sup> Rather, it is another indication that many of the ideas and terms that we have come to associate with Ebn 'Arabi were already in the air as Sufi thinkers engaged and reworked the earlier tradition. Formulations that recall Ebn 'Arabi's teachings can be found in the works of several of his predecessors and

60. Shafī'i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 48–49.

61. Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, Manṭeq al-ṭayr, ed. Moḥammad Reżā Shafī'i-Kadkani, 2nd ed. (Tehran: Sokhan, 1387/[2008–9]), lines 62–63.

62. Ibid., lines 1124–28.

63. Shafī'i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 49–50.

64. Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, Divān-e 'Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi, ed. Mahdi Madāyini and Mehrān Afshāri (Tehran: Charkh, 1392/[2013–14]), ghazal 362, qaṣida 10; Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, Moṣibat-nāma, ed. Moḥammad Reżā Shafī'i-Kadkani, 2nd ed. (Tehran: Sokhan, 1388/[2009–10]), lines 418, 5085–87; Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, Asrār-nāma, ed. Moḥammad Reżā Shafī'i-Kadkani, 2nd ed. (Tehran: Sokhan, 1388/[2009–10]), lines 696–98.

65. Ahmed Ateş, "Ibn al-'Arabī," in Encyclopaedia of Islam, 2nd ed., ed. P. Bearman et al. (Leiden: Brill Online), posted 2012, https://doi.org/10.1163/1573-3912\_islam\_COM\_0316. On 'Aṭṭār's death date, see O'Malley, "Poetry and Pedagogy," 32–34.

contemporaries, including Ebn al-Fāreẓ, Aḥmad-e Ghazzālī, ‘Aṭṭār, and even Rumi, but these isomorphic parallelisms do not necessarily indicate any direct influence.<sup>66</sup>

More serious is Shafī‘i-Kadkani’s claim that the Khosrow-nāma contains a taẓmīn (exact quotation of one author by another) from the Golshan-e rāz of Shabestari (d. 1340), a mystical poet who helped popularize Ebn ‘Arabi in the Persian-speaking world. The verse in question justifies Ḥallāj’s famous utterance “I am the Truth” by likening him to the burning bush through which God spoke to Moses:

If “Verily, I am God” is allowed from a bush,
Then why is it not allowed from a fortunate one?

رواست انى انا الله از درختى      چرا نبود روا از نيك بختى<sup>68</sup>

Obviously, if the author of the Khosrow-nāma copied this line from the Golshan-e rāz, he could not have been ‘Aṭṭār, who had died more than a century earlier. This verse, however, is not found in the oldest manuscripts of the Golshan-e rāz or in the critical edition by Šamad Movahhed, who traces it to the later commentary by Lāhiji.<sup>68</sup> It is thus entirely possible that the line actually originated with ‘Aṭṭār and was later assimilated into the textual legacy of Shabestari, who was a self-confessed ‘Aṭṭār superfan.<sup>69</sup> This scenario is made more likely by the fact that the line is found in the BnF manuscript of the Khosrow-nāma, which was copied before the Golshan-e rāz was even written. Furthermore, ‘Aṭṭār’s Tazkera contains a line of prose that makes exactly the same point with the same vocabulary: “[If] it is allowed [ravā] that the cry of ‘Verily, I am God’ [enni anā allāh] emerge from a bush [darakhti]<sup>70</sup>—without the bush intervening—then why is it not allowed [ravā] for ‘I am the Truth’ to emerge from Ḥosayn [Ḥallāj]?”<sup>70</sup> Prose material included in the Tazkera is often found in poetic form in ‘Aṭṭār’s *maṣnavī*s, and this appears to be classic case of such transference.

Besides the alleged influence of Shabestari and Ebn ‘Arabi, Shafī‘i-Kadkani also argues that the romance’s praise of Sa‘d al-Din b. al-Rabīb, who seems to have been the author’s

66. Nasrallāh Purjavādi, Solṭān-e ʿarīqat: Savāneh, zendegi, va sharḥ-e āṣār-e Khwāja Aḥmad-e Ghazzālī (Tehran: Āgāh, 1358/[1979]), 104–7; Chittick, “Rumi and Waḥdat al-wujūd,” 70–71, 91–97, 101–4; Th. Emil Homerin, ed. and trans., Umar Ibn al-Fāriḍ: Sufi Verse, Saintly Life (New York: Paulist Press, 2001), 34–35. In his chapter’s appendix, Chittick facetiously argues that ‘Aṭṭār was influenced by Ebn ‘Arabi. His purpose is to show that general formulations of the “unity of being” are common in the Persian poetical tradition, and if one believes that they are necessarily indicative of influence from Ebn ‘Arabi, one must concede that even a poet like ‘Aṭṭār, who died before Ebn ‘Arabi’s most important works were written, was somehow influenced by him.

67. BnF 1434, fol. 5r; cf. ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, line 141.

68. Maḥmud Shabestari, Majmu‘a-ye āṣār-e Shaykh Maḥmud Shabestari, ed. Šamad Movahhed (Tehran: Ṭahuri, 1365/[1986–87]), 135. The Khosrow-nāma also puns on the letter mīm that separates Aḥmad (Muhammad) from Aḥad (God), and Shafī‘i-Kadkani argues that this punning is a direct response to a couple of lines in Shabestari. In this case, too, however, the most salient line is missing from the critical edition of the Golshan-e rāz, while such punning is well attested in ‘Aṭṭār’s undisputed works. See Shafī‘i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 46–47; Shabestari, Āṣār-e Shabestari, 67, 123; ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, lines 332–35; ‘Aṭṭār, Moṣibat-nāma, ed. Shafī‘i-Kadkani, lines 339–41, 440–41.

69. Shabestari, Āṣār-e Shabestari, 69.

70. ‘Aṭṭār, Tazkerat al-awliā, 510.

spiritual guide, contains terminology that was not applied to religious figures until the eighth/fourteenth century: specifically, the title khwāja and the honorific qoṭb-e awliā (pole of the saints).<sup>71</sup> Contrary to this claim, however, the term khwāja is attested in sixth/twelfth- and seventh/thirteenth-century texts—in fact, it is even used by ‘Aṭṭār himself in his undisputed maṣnavīs in reference to religious leaders. In the Elāhi-nāma, two anecdotes are attributed to Abu ‘Ali Farmādi, a mystical preacher from the fifth/eleventh century, who is referred to in the text as Khwāja Bu ‘Ali.<sup>72</sup> We also find references to Khwāja Akkāfi, a Nayshāburi religious figure from the generation prior to ‘Aṭṭār, and a story featuring Khwāja Bu ‘Ali Daqqāq, the famed teacher of Qoshayri.<sup>73</sup> The title also appears in ‘Aṭṭār’s Tazkera—not in the chapter headings, but within the anecdotes themselves, where students routinely call their teachers by this title. And in at least one case, the title is affixed to a proper name (Khwāja ‘Ali Sirgāni).<sup>74</sup>

‘Aṭṭār uses the term qoṭb relatively frequently as well, especially in the rhyming prose introductions to the biographies in the Tazkera. Saints are often described as the axial pole (qoṭb al-madār), the axis of the age (qoṭb-e vaqt), the axis of the world (qoṭb-e ‘ālam), and the axis of religion (qoṭb-e din).<sup>75</sup> Shafi‘i-Kadkani is correct that the specific compound qoṭb-e awliā does not appear, but I am reluctant to banish the Khosrow-nāma as spurious on the basis of this single unique phrase not found in other works of the corpus.<sup>76</sup>

Matters of Style

The Khosrow-nāma allegedly deviates from ‘Aṭṭār’s undisputed works in terms of style and literary norms, too. According to this argument, the Khosrow-nāma exhibits excessive repetition (eltezām) that is more consistent with the literary tastes of the ninth/fifteenth century than with those of the sixth/twelfth or seventh/thirteenth. More specifically, Shafi‘i-Kadkani points to a thirty-verse passage in the poem’s opening praise of Muhammad that, in some manuscripts, contains more than sixty instances of the word “stone.”<sup>77</sup> This passage, which begins with a divine voice addressing Muhammad, references the battle of Uḥud, during which several of the Prophet’s teeth were allegedly knocked out by a

71. Shafi‘i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 51–52; ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, lines 540–60.

72. Farid al-Din ‘Aṭṭār, Elāhi-nāma, ed. Mohammad Reżā Shafi‘i-Kadkani, 2nd ed. (Tehran: Sokhan, 1388/[2009–10]), lines 2660, 6180.

73. ‘Aṭṭār, Moṣibat-nāma, ed. Shafi‘i-Kadkani, lines 2071, 3823, 4613.

74. ‘Aṭṭār, Tazkerat al-awliā, 332.

75. Ibid., 118, 138, 248, 459.

76. Although qoṭb-e awliā appears only once, other distinctive words are found across the corpus. Particularly interesting is chekāda, an unusual variant of chekād, indicating the crown of the head. The word is found in the Khosrow-nāma (line 5801), as well as the Elāhi-nāma (line 1307) and the divān; see Farid al-Din ‘Aṭṭār, Divān-e ‘Aṭṭār, ed. Taqī Tafazzoli (Tehran: Enteshārāt-e ‘Elmi va Farhangī, 1386/[2007]), ghazal 367. A search of ganjoor.net, the popular online database of Persian poetry, reveals no other instances of the word’s use by poets other than ‘Aṭṭār. Likewise, although chekāda is defined in the major Mughal-era and contemporary dictionaries (Farhang-e Jahāngiri, Farhang-e Rashidi, Loghat-nāma-ye Dehkhodā, Farhang-e Sokhan), these give no attestations of the word outside of ‘Aṭṭār’s oeuvre.

77. Shafi‘i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 44–45.

rock.<sup>78</sup> Such repetition, which many modern critics find poetically unpleasing, is allegedly foreign to the style of ʿAṭṭār and his contemporaries. It is not confined to the doxology, either; the Khosrow-nāma contains several examples of the device throughout its eight thousand verses, which is one of the reasons that Shafīʿi-Kadkani, in the 1979 version of his argument, attributes the poem as a whole, and not just its introduction, to the ninth/fifteenth century.<sup>79</sup>

The point is not especially convincing, however, because a close inspection of ʿAṭṭār's undisputed works shows similar instances of protracted repetition. For example, the famous Shaykh Ṣanʿān story from the Manteq al-ṭayr features a cluster of twenty verses that almost all contain some variation on the word “night.”<sup>80</sup> The Asrār-nāma's praise of the Prophet boasts a spectacular forty-line passage in which every verse contains one—and sometimes two—instances of the word “finger” (angosht) or closely related terms such as “ring” (angoshtari), “thimble” (angoshtvāna), or “charcoal” (angesht).<sup>81</sup> There are also several extended sections of anaphora (repetition at the beginning of the line) in the Moṣibat-nāma's doxology, including a hundred verses that each ask “What is (chist) . . . ?” and then define a different religious concept.<sup>82</sup> According to Bürgel, who has identified a number of additional examples, anaphora and repetition are prominent features of ʿAṭṭār's work.<sup>83</sup> Given ʿAṭṭār's fondness for such devices in his undisputed works, the Khosrow-nāma's use of repetition does not seem particularly unusual.<sup>84</sup>

The second point relates not to style but to ʿAṭṭār's broader literary habits. The Khosrow-nāma contains a line that, in Shafīʿi-Kadkani's reading, suggests the poem was titled in honor of a temporal ruler, which would seem to be at odds with the condemnation of

78. ʿAṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, lines 258–61.

79. Shafīʿi-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 45.

80. ʿAṭṭār, Manteq al-ṭayr, lines 1246–65.

81. ʿAṭṭār, Asrār-nāma, lines 200–41. See the translation in J. Christoph Bürgel, “Some Remarks on Forms and Functions of Repetitive Structures in the Epic Poetry of ʿAṭṭār,” in Lewisohn and Shackleton, Spiritual Flight, 208–11.

82. Farid al-Din ʿAṭṭār, Moṣibat-nāma, ed. Nurāni Veṣāl (Tehran: Zavvār, 1373/[1994]), 41–46. Shafīʿi-Kadkani, in his edition, expresses doubt that these passages are authentic. Although they are found in all known manuscripts of the poem, the hundred lines repeating “What is . . . ?” are crossed out in one of the earliest copies, where a marginal note claims that they were taken from the Oshtor-nāma (a likely spurious work attributed to ʿAṭṭār). See his introduction to the Moṣibat-nāma, 105, 112.

83. Bürgel, “Repetitive Structures in ʿAṭṭār.”

84. Shafīʿi-Kadkani makes another argument in this section regarding a line in the Khosrow-nāma's introduction that puns on the titles of Ebn Sinā's books: “Although medicine is found in the Canon (Qānun) / Pointers (Eshārāt) are found in poetry and riddles (moʿammā)” (line 615). According to Shafīʿi-Kadkani, such punning was not a common literary trope until the eighth/fourteenth century. Furthermore, Shafīʿi-Kadkani argues that riddles became a serious literary genre that could be reasonably paired with “poetry” only in the ninth/fifteenth century. However, ʿAṭṭār also puns on the titles of Ebn Sinā's books in his undisputed works, and the term “riddles” here seems to refer not so much to a fixed genre as to the spiritual secrets that ʿAṭṭār purports to explore through speech. See Shafīʿi-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 45–46; ʿAṭṭār, Moṣibat-nāma, ed. Shafīʿi-Kadkani, line 865.

panegyric found in ‘Aṭṭār’s undisputed works. This anti-panegyric sentiment finds its strongest expression in the conclusion to the Manṭeq al-ṭayr:

Thank God that I am no courtier,
That I am unbound to any reprobate.
Why should I bind my heart to anyone,
And take the name of some degenerate as lord?
I have not eaten the victuals of a tyrant,
Nor have I closed a book with a patron’s name.
My high aspiration suffices for my patron;
Sustenance of body and power of spirit are enough for me.

|   |                            |
|---|----------------------------|
| بسته هر ناسزاواری نیم                   | شکر ایزد را که درباری نیم  |
| نام هر دون را خداوندی نهم               | من ز کس بر دل کجا بندی نهم |
| نه کتابی را تخلص کرده‌ام                | نه طعام هیچ ظالم خورده‌ام  |
| قوت جسم و قوت روحم بس است <sup>86</sup> | همت عالیم ممدوحم بس است    |

‘Aṭṭār represents himself as untainted by participation in the patronage economy: he has not attached himself to the court, he has not dedicated a book to any patron, and he has received no reward for his verse.

The Khosrow-nāma, however, contains the following line in its preface, according to which the poem’s title honors the “king of the face of the earth”:

In the name of the king (khosrow) of the face of the earth,
I have named this the Khosrow-nāma.

به نام خسرو روی زمین را نهادم نام خسرونامه این را<sup>86</sup>

According to Shafī‘i-Kadkani, such a line could not have been written by ‘Aṭṭār given his strong denunciations of panegyric.<sup>87</sup> It is not immediately clear to me, however, that this “khosrow” necessarily refers to a historical potentate. The khosrow in question is not named, and he is praised only with a vague allusion to the universal scope of his rule. If this were intended as praise for an actual patron, one would expect something a bit more specific and extensive. It thus seems more likely that the khosrow referred to here is not a temporal ruler but the protagonist of the poem, who, as the emperor of Rum and Iran, can be appropriately styled the “king of the face of the earth.”<sup>88</sup>

85. ‘Aṭṭār, Manṭeq al-ṭayr, lines 4601–4.

86. ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, line 586.

87. Shafī‘i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 40–41.

88. The passage continues with a vocative address to some “lord” (khodāvandā), enjoining him to keep the Khosrow-nāma illuminated by the eyes of the people of wisdom and protected from the malevolence of the ignorant (lines 587–91). Although one could also read this passage as an address to the patron, one can just as easily see it as a prayer to God to protect ‘Aṭṭār’s literary legacy.

In any case, even if this verse were intended to refer to a particular king, it would hardly disprove 'Aṭṭār's authorship. Such an argument assumes a stark binary between panegyric and non-panegyric verse, in which an allusive reference to an unnamed temporal ruler automatically qualifies as full-blown praise poetry (madḥ). But it is not at all clear that 'Aṭṭār would have accepted this characterization. He may have included the line to honor a prince for whom he felt some particular gratitude, but unless he had contacts in the court to introduce him into courtly literary circles, it is unlikely that he could have ever derived monetary benefit from a single verse.<sup>89</sup> Moreover, 'Aṭṭār's rhetorical condemnations of panegyric poetry should not be taken to mean that he never composed a single verse at any point in his life in praise of a political ruler. His condemnations are idealized projections, not statements of fact. Solṭān Valad, Rumi's son and successor, condemned "the poetry of professional poets" (she'r-e shā'er) but still composed a number of panegyric poems in a classical vein.<sup>90</sup> Sanā'i, too, pursued patronage relationships with political and religious authorities even as he criticized panegyric in much the same language as 'Aṭṭār.<sup>91</sup> If these poets entered into formal patronage relationships despite their criticism of the practice, I see no reason to assume that 'Aṭṭār could not have written the occasional verse that evokes panegyric poetry.<sup>92</sup>

Ultimately, the recent scholarly resistance to the authenticity of the Khosrow-nāma seems to be rooted in the assumption that a spiritually inclined writer like 'Aṭṭār would

89. On the importance of having an introduction to the court—in a variety of periods—see Jerome Clinton, The Divan of Manūchihri Dāmghāni: A Critical Study (Minneapolis: Bibliotheca Islamica, 1972), 29–44; Franklin Lewis, "Reading, Writing, and Recitation: Sanā'i and the Origins of the Persian Ghazal" (PhD diss., University of Chicago, 1995), 165–68; E. M. Subtelny, "Scenes from the Literary Life of Timūrid Herāt," in Logos Islamikos: Studia Islamica in Honorem Georgii Michaelis Wickens, ed. Roger Savory and Dionisius Agius (Toronto: Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, 1984).

90. Franklin Lewis, "Solṭān Valad and the Political Order: Framing the Ethos and Praxis of Poetry in the Mevlevi Tradition after Rumi," in Persian Language, Literature and Culture: New Leaves, Fresh Looks, ed. Kamran Talattof (Abingdon, UK: Routledge, 2015), 24–25.

91. Lewis, "Reading, Writing, and Recitation," 124–25, 176–78; J. T. P. de Bruijn, "Comparative Notes on Sanā'i and 'Aṭṭār," in Classical Persian Sufism from Its Origins to Rumi, ed. Leonard Lewisohn (London: Khaniqahi Nimatullahi Publications, 1993), 362–63, 375–77.

92. There are several verses attributed to 'Aṭṭār that seem to have been dedicated to royal patrons. Shafī'i-Kadkani argues that they cannot, for this reason, be authentic. In Tafazzoli's edition of the divān, the poems in question are qaṣidas 3, 9, 14, 15, and 27, and ghazals 201 and 307. The ghazals are not included in Madāyeni and Afshāri's more recent edition, but two of the qaṣidas are reproduced in its appendix of doubtful attributions, where they are numbered 1 and 3. Furthermore, the rhetorical manual of Shams-e Qays attributes to 'Aṭṭār a verse that praises the Khwārazm-Shāh Moḥammad b. Tekish by name. This verse is not found in 'Aṭṭār's divān, but qaṣida 15 in Tafazzoli's edition is in the same rhyme and meter. Shafī'i-Kadkani thus speculates that this verse was originally part of that poem, and that it was composed by a different 'Aṭṭār who was working as a panegyrist in the Khwārazm-Shāh's court. Furthermore, because the qaṣida in question contains some extended repetition, and the romance Khosrow-nāma contains extended repetition, he claims they are by one and the same poet. Needless to say, the argument is rather speculative. See Shafī'i-Kadkani, Zabur, 95–99; Shams-e Qays, al-Mo'jam fi ma'āyir ash'ar al-'ajam, ed. Sirus Shamisā (Tehran: Enteshārāt-e Dāneshgāh-e Tehrān, 1373/[1994–95]), 276.

never write a “love story without the slightest relation to Sufism.”<sup>93</sup> Such an attitude reductively draws a sharp, artificial border between the “secular” and the “mystical” and expects a uniformity of output from poets who were, after all, human beings endowed with multifaceted personalities. And the Khosrow-nāma, although a love story, does in fact display mystical and religious sensibilities, especially in its moralizing passages on the inevitability of death, the evils of material wealth, and the necessity of detachment from the world. Further, ‘Aṭṭār’s authentic “mystical” works also show an interest in romance narratives. The Elāhi-nāma, for instance, contains the tragic love story of Bektash and Rābe‘a, the daughter of Ka‘b.<sup>94</sup> Even more salient is the tale of Marḥuma, also from the Elāhi-nāma, which clearly recalls the narrative structures of Hellenistic romances. It relates the adventures of a woman who must preserve her chastity after being separated from her husband, and it includes familiar topoi such as a lustful male protector, mendacious accusations of infidelity, multiple instances of love at first sight, a sea voyage, a false death, and a failure of recognition before a final revelation.<sup>95</sup> Especially interesting is a scene in which Marḥuma, after a sea voyage, dons men’s clothes in order to pass as a young man and thereby discourage further male suitors and assailants; in the Khosrow-nāma, Gol employs the exact same stratagem after she is shipwrecked in China.<sup>96</sup> In any case, ‘Aṭṭār clearly displays an interest in long romantic stories in his authentic works, and the Khosrow-nāma could have easily emerged from the same set of authorial preoccupations.

Shifting Titles and Changing Claims

Let us presume, for a moment, that the Khosrow-nāma was not a product of ‘Aṭṭār’s pen. Why, then, does ‘Aṭṭār list the poem as one of his own in the preface to the Mokhtār-nāma, which is generally considered an authentic work? Shafī‘i-Kadkani has an ingenious (but ultimately unsatisfying) answer to this knotty problem. Because the Mokhtār-nāma does not include the Elāhi-nāma in its enumeration of ‘Aṭṭār’s previous works, he postulates that its mention of the Khosrow-nāma refers not to the romance Gol o Hermez, but to that otherwise unmentioned maṣnavi.<sup>97</sup> According to Shafī‘i-Kadkani, the title “Khosrow-nāma” (literally “Book of the king”) would actually be an appropriate name for the Elāhi-nāma because it recounts the pedagogical discussions of six princes with their wise royal father

---

93. Shafī‘i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 35–36; Zarrinkub, Ṣedā-ye bāl-e simorgh, 69.

94. ‘Aṭṭār, Elāhi-nāma, lines 371–86.

95. Ibid., lines 484–792. The tale has been translated by Lewis as “Tale of the Righteous Woman (Whose Husband Had Gone on a Journey),” in Converging Zones: Persian Literary Tradition and the Writing of History, ed. Wali Ahmad (Costa Mesa, CA: Mazda, 2012). Also see Franklin Lewis, “One Chaste Muslim Maiden and a Persian in a Pear Tree: Analogues of Boccaccio and Chaucer in Four Earlier Arabic and Persian Tales,” in Metaphors and Imagery: Studies in Classical Persian Poetry, ed. Asghar Seyed-Gohrab (Leiden: Brill, 2012), 164–87; Davis, Panthea’s Children, 105–9.

96. ‘Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, lines 6483–818.

97. My alternative explanation for this silence is that the Elāhi-nāma was composed after the compilation of the Mokhtār-nāma.

(who is referred to within the poem as a caliph [khalifa]).<sup>98</sup> He thus speculates that the poem was originally entitled the Khosrow-nāma, but that over time its title shifted to the more generic Elāhi-nāma.<sup>99</sup> This name change may have even been instigated by the same forger or forgers who repackaged the romance Gol o Hermez as the Khosrow-nāma of 'Aṭṭār.<sup>100</sup>

As Shafī'i-Kadkani rightly observes, premodern titles display a remarkable fluidity. Even many of 'Aṭṭār's undisputed works have been known by multiple names: some manuscripts of the Moṣibat-nāma bear the title Javāb-nāma; the Asrār-nāma is occasionally labeled Ramz-nāma;<sup>101</sup> and 'Aṭṭār himself refers to the Manṭeq al-ṭayr not only by that name, but also as the Maqāmāt-e ṭoyur and the Ṭoyur-nāma.<sup>102</sup> Nevertheless, even though multiple titles are often attested for premodern maṣnavis, there is no solid evidence that the Elāhi-nāma was ever known as the Khosrow-nāma. The latter title is not found at the head of any of manuscripts of the poem, and no later anthologists or bibliographers discuss it under that name. 'Aṭṭār makes no mention of such a title in the poem itself, even though he often explains the titles of his other works. If the Elāhi-nāma were originally known as the Khosrow-nāma, one would expect that some trace of the original name would remain, either in the manuscript paratexts, in the biographical tradition, or in the poem itself. The only major piece of evidence that Shafī'i-Kadkani provides, however, is an early manuscript of 'Aṭṭār's collected works whose calligraphic frontispiece lists, in addition to the rest of 'Aṭṭār's titles, both the Elāhi-nāma and the Khosrow-nāma, even though it does not contain the text of the latter.<sup>103</sup> According to Shafī'i-Kadkani, this discrepancy shows that the poem now known as the Elāhi-nāma was also known as the Khosrow-nāma when the manuscript was copied, but the scribe mistakenly thought each name referred to a separate work, so he listed them separately on the frontispiece.<sup>104</sup> But it is far from obvious how the mismatch between the frontispiece and the contents of the manuscript should be interpreted—it could have resulted from any number of confusions or miscommunications. Perhaps the scribe originally intended to include Khosrow-nāma, but then dropped it on the basis that it did not fit generically with the other works.<sup>105</sup>

98. Shafī'i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 57–58; Shafī'i-Kadkani, Zabur, 86–88; 'Aṭṭār, Elāhi-nāma, line 465.

99. On Elāhi-nāma as a generic title, see de Bruijn, Piety and Poetry, 128.

100. Shafī'i-Kadkani, introduction to Elāhi-nāma, 51, 55.

101. Manuscripts bearing these alternate titles are listed in Ritter, "Philologika XIV," 10, 58.

102. 'Aṭṭār, Mokhtār-nāma, 70, 72; 'Aṭṭār, Manṭeq al-ṭayr, line 4487.

103. Ketāb-khāna-ye Salṭanati 327; see the descriptions in Badri Ātābāy, Fehrest-e divān-hā-ye khaṭṭi-ye Ketāb-khāna-ye Salṭanati (Tehran: Chāp-khāna-ye Zibā, 2535 sh./[1976]), 799–804; Mahdi Bayāni, Fehrest-e nā-tamām-e te'dādi az kotob-e Ketāb-khāna-ye Salṭanati (Tehran: Chāp-khāna-ye Bānk-e Melli-ye Irān, 1970), 92–97.

104. Shafī'i-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 56.

105. Shafī'i-Kadkani also adduces two even more ambiguous pieces of evidence. First, Aḥmad Rāzi's Haft eqlim lists the Khosrow-nāma, the Gol o Hermez, and the Elāhi-nāma as three separate works, which, according to Shafī'i-Kadkani, shows that throughout the tenth/sixteenth century there was still a memory of the Khosrow-nāma (i.e., the Elāhi-nāma) and the Gol o Hermez as different poems. To my mind, however, this mention is easily explained by the bibliographers' habit of treating variant titles as independent works; I do

It is not, moreover, readily apparent why someone would forge an elaborate introduction to attribute this particular romance to ‘Aṭṭār. It is true that many spurious poems were attributed to him, sometimes through deliberate forgery. ‘Aṭṭār-e Tuni, for instance, composed the Lesān al-ghayb and the Maḏhar al-‘ajā’eb in the ninth/fifteenth century and falsely attributed them to ‘Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi. But by the time ‘Aṭṭār-e Tuni was writing, ‘Aṭṭār’s reputation as a saintly poet was firmly established; Tuni seems to have been motivated by a desire to attract a wider audience for his own religio-didactic maṣnavīs, and perhaps also to co-opt the famed ‘Aṭṭār as a Shi‘ī poet.<sup>106</sup> It is difficult to see, however, what a forger could gain in the case of the Khosrow-nāma. The romance does not bolster or accord with ‘Aṭṭār’s saintly image among later generations, so it is unlikely that a devotee or a spiritual follower of ‘Aṭṭār would have constructed the introduction. Likewise, if the author of the Gol o Hermez or one of his fans wanted to boost that poem’s circulation, it would not make much sense to attribute it to ‘Aṭṭār, who was celebrated not for romances, but for his didactic maṣnavīs.<sup>107</sup>

In the introduction to his 2008 edition of the Elāhi-nāma, Shafi‘ī-Kadkani added a new, complicating layer to the argument: he suggested that parts of the Khosrow-nāma’s conclusion and some of its doxology may actually be authentic to ‘Aṭṭār. According to this hypothesis, a group of forgers wanted to attribute the romance Gol o Hermez to ‘Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi; they thus prefaced the romance with a fake account of the work’s composition, and to give this forged introduction an air of authenticity, they extracted part of ‘Aṭṭār’s genuine doxology from the poem now known as the Elāhi-nāma—including its opening praise of God and the Prophet—and attached it to the romance.<sup>108</sup> To make the forgery even more convincing, they also attached much of the Elāhi-nāma’s original conclusion to the Khosrow-nāma.<sup>109</sup> These forgers then replaced the Elāhi-nāma’s “missing” doxology with a set of forged lines and verses taken from ‘Aṭṭār’s Asrār-nāma and other parts of the Elāhi-nāma.<sup>110</sup>

Shafi‘ī-Kadkani does not fully spell out the reasoning behind this new claim—the only concrete evidence he offers has to do with the relative lengths of the various doxologies and conclusions—but the argument as a whole seems to be motivated by his discomfort with the not see how it supports Shafi‘ī-Kadkani’s claim. Second, Shafi‘ī-Kadkani also writes that the title page of the 1295/1878 Lucknow lithograph reads “Hormoz o Golrokh, famous as the Elāhi-nāma,” but in my copy of the text I find only “Hormoz o Golrokh, famous as the Khosrow-nāma.” It is possible, of course, that other title pages were produced, but in any case the evidence is rather late and likely not very reliable. See Shafi‘ī-Kadkani, introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, 58–59.

---

106. Many pre-Safavid Persian poets were later “claimed” as Shi‘is; see, for example, the case of Sanā‘ī, discussed in de Bruijn, Piety and Poetry, 13, 73–74; cf. Lewis, “Reading, Writing, and Recitation,” 183–85.

107. At one point, Shafi‘ī-Kadkani suggests that literary agents collecting manuscripts for court libraries were behind the forgery, as it allowed them to collect fees for two manuscripts in place of one (introduction to Elāhi-nāma, 61). It is still not clear, however, why they would have attached the poem specifically to ‘Aṭṭār, especially given the massive amount of work involved (see below).

108. Shafi‘ī-Kadkani, introduction to Elāhi-nāma, 56–63.

109. Ibid., 59–60.

110. Ibid., 58, 69–71.

textual messiness of the Elāhi-nāma's current doxology, whose multiple recensions cannot be easily reconciled into a single "authentic" authorial version.<sup>111</sup> Although he does not discuss the stylistic particulars, we should also note that the Khosrow-nāma's conclusion exhibits striking similarities with the concluding sections of 'Aṭṭār's undisputed works. The speaker begins with self-praise regarding the beauty of his verses and their spiritual value and then shifts to self-criticism and confessions of hypocrisy, before concluding with a prayer for himself and his deceased mother, which recalls 'Aṭṭār's lament for his father at the end of the Asrār-nāma.<sup>112</sup> In any case, whereas previously Shafi'i-Kadkani argued on the basis of stylistic and religious evidence that the entire doxology of the Khosrow-nāma was fabricated, he now suggests that much of it may be authentic, although he maintains that the lines he earlier identified as problematic are still later interpolations.<sup>113</sup> Furthermore, the new argument presupposes that the alleged forgery must have taken place before all extant copies of the Elāhi-nāma were transcribed, meaning before 729/1328–1329; he thus seems to have abandoned the claim that the poem is a Timurid-era forgery, although he does not make this explicit.<sup>114</sup>

However, the proposed forgery would have necessitated a literary conspiracy of truly epic proportions. Certainly we must acknowledge the philological messiness of the Elāhi-nāma's introduction, but it is difficult to believe that the poem's original doxology can now be found in Khosrow-nāma, where it was transferred on a line-by-line basis by a group of later forgers. How could such a forgery have been perpetrated in the manuscript age on two circulating texts, one of which must have enjoyed some popularity, so completely that no trace of their original forms remains? No manuscript of the Khosrow-nāma has come to light without its allegedly forged preface, nor is there any extant manuscript of the Elāhi-nāma that retains its allegedly original title or doxology. I do not see how a group of forgers could have accomplished this feat without identifying, gathering, doctoring, and recirculating the majority of existing manuscripts of both poems across the Iranian world. And for such a project to have been worth undertaking, 'Aṭṭār must have been a well-known and desirable poet—in which case a great number of manuscripts of his Elāhi-nāma would presumably have been in existence, making the endeavor even more difficult.

Conclusion

Shafi'i-Kadkani's argument for the spuriousness of the Khosrow-nāma's attribution to 'Aṭṭār has, over the past forty years, exerted considerable influence on scholarship. Nevertheless, even though it is often cited and widely accepted, it has a number of weak points. First, the list of manuscripts used by Shafi'i-Kadkani to argue for a later provenance is incomplete; he does not include the early Bibliothèque nationale manuscript, which was transcribed in the late seventh/thirteenth century and thus contradicts a ninth/fifteenth-century dating. Next, the circular cross-references that he identifies as contradictory could

111. Ibid., 60–61, 63–67; Zarrinkub, Ṣedā-ye bāl-e simorgh, 70.

112. 'Aṭṭār, Khosrow-nāma, lines 8338–64; 'Aṭṭār, Asrār-nāma, lines 3282–301.

113. Shafi'i-Kadkani, introduction to Elāhi-nāma, 64, 68.

114. Ritter, "Philologica XIV," 47.

easily have resulted from a process of authorial revision; in fact, the Khosrow-nāma's introduction describes just such a process. Further, Shafi'i-Kadkani asserts that the poem (and especially its preface) diverges from 'Aṭṭār's undisputed works in terms of style and religious terminology, but I have shown that these divergences are exaggerated. Finally, if the romance is forged, one must explain how 'Aṭṭār came to mention it in the Mokhtār-nāma, and the theory of a title shift, although possible in the abstract, is not supported by any evidence in this specific case.

In short, although Shafi'i-Kadkani's argument is erudite and complex, its version of events is ultimately less likely than a much simpler alternative: namely, that 'Aṭṭār actually did write the Khosrow-nāma. Certainly, this explanation is not without its own peculiarities. It means that 'Aṭṭār tried his hand at the romance genre, and that he composed one version of the poem before the Mokhtār-nāma, only to revise it later. But this version of events is much easier to imagine than is a literary conspiracy in which forgers changed the titles of two poems, constructed a false preface attributing the Khosrow-nāma to 'Aṭṭār, transferred the Elāhi-nāma's doxology to the Khosrow-nāma, and then successfully suppressed the previous forms of both poems, all without any clear motivation. Unless new, contrary evidence surfaces, the most reasonable attitude toward the question of the Khosrow-nāma's authenticity is thus one of circumspect acceptance.

The impact of Shafi'i-Kadkani's argument is difficult to overstate. Nearly all scholarly work on 'Aṭṭār, for almost the past half century, has discounted the Khosrow-nāma on the premise that it is a spurious attribution. But as I have shown, the argument for its spuriousness is shaky at best. I thus hope that this article will spur scholars to reconsider their understanding of 'Aṭṭār and his place in literary history given the likelihood that the Khosrow-nāma is, in fact, authentic. In particular, further investigations into 'Aṭṭār's biography and authorial development that take the Khosrow-nāma into account are needed, as are reevaluations of conclusions about his relationship to Sufism, the scope of his poetic models, and possible intertextual ties with authors in the romantic tradition. More than this, however, the above examination testifies to the importance of continuing scholarly evaluation of basic, field-shaping arguments. Conclusions about attribution have the potential to shape generations of scholarship, and they thus must not be simply treated as "one and done." Rather, they must be carefully checked and rechecked, even when proposed by respected scholars and involving rather unglamorous, nitty-gritty philological work. Otherwise, through widespread citation, potentially misleading conclusions are easily canonized as accepted knowledge and scholarly consensus.

Bibliography

- Ātābāy, Badri. Fehrest-e divān-hā-ye khaṭṭi-ye Ketāb-khāna-ye Salṭanati. Tehran: Chāp-khāna-ye Zibā, 2535 sh./[1976].
- Ateş, Ahmed. "Ibn al-‘Arabī." In Encyclopaedia of Islam, 2nd ed., edited by P. Bearman, T. Bianquis, C. E. Bosworth, E. van Donzel, and W. P. Heinrichs. Leiden: Brill Online. Posted 2012. https://doi.org/10.1163/1573-3912\_islam\_COM\_0316.
- ‘Aṭṭār, Farid al-Din. Asrār-nāma. Edited by Moḥammad Reżā Shafī‘i-Kadkani. 2nd ed. Tehran: Sokhan, 1388/[2009–10].
- . Divān-e ‘Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi. Edited by Mahdi Madāyeni and Mehrān Afshāri. Tehran: Charkh, 1392/[2013–14].
- . Divān-e ‘Aṭṭār. Edited by Taqi Tafazzoli. Tehran: Enteshārāt-e ‘Elmi va Farhangī, 1386/[2007].
- . Elāhi-nāma. Edited by Mohammad Reżā Shafī‘i-Kadkani. 2nd ed. Tehran: Sokhan, 1388/[2009–10].
- (attrib.). Khosrow-nāma. Lithograph. Lucknow: Samar-e Hend, 1295/1878.
- (attrib.). Khosrow-nāma. Edited by Aḥmad Sohayli-Khwānsāri. Tehran: Anjoman-e Āsar-e Melli, 1339/[1961–62].
- . Manteq al-ṭayr. Edited by Moḥammad Reżā Shafī‘i-Kadkani. 2nd ed. Tehran: Sokhan, 1387/[2008–9].
- . Mokhtār-nāma. Edited by Moḥammad Reżā Shafī‘i-Kadkani. 2nd ed. Tehran: Sokhan, 1389/[2010–11].
- . Moşibat-nāma. Edited by Nurāni Veşāl. Tehran: Zavvār, 1373/[1994].
- . Moşibat-nāma. Edited by Moḥammad Reżā Shafī‘i-Kadkani. 2nd ed. Tehran: Sokhan, 1388/[2009–10].
- . Tazkerat al-awliā. Edited by Moḥammad Este‘lāmi. Rev. ed. Tehran: Zavvār, 1383/[2004–5].
- Baldick, Julian. "Persian Şūfi Poetry up to the Fifteenth Century." In History of Persian Literature: From the Beginning of the Islamic Period to the Present Day, edited by George Morrison, 113–32. Leiden: Brill, 1981.
- Bayāni, Mahdi. Fehrest-e nā-tamām-e te‘dādi az kotob-e Ketāb-khāna-ye Salṭanati. Tehran: Chāp-khāna-ye Bānk-e Melli-ye Irān, 1970.

- Bloch, E. Catalogue des manuscrits persans. 4 vols. Paris: Réunion des bibliothèques nationales, 1905–34.
- Bürge, J. Christoph. “Some Remarks on Forms and Functions of Repetitive Structures in the Epic Poetry of ‘Aṭṭār.” In Lewisohn and Shackel, Spiritual Flight, 197–214.
- Chittick, William. “Rumi and Waḥdat al-wujūd.” In Poetry and Mysticism in Islam: The Heritage of Rumi, edited by Amin Banani, Richard G. Hovannisian, and Georges Sabagh, 70–111. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1994.
- Clinton, Jerome. The Divan of Manūchihri Dāmghāni: A Critical Study. Minneapolis: Bibliotheca Islamica, 1972.
- Cross, Cameron. “The Poetics of Romantic Love in Vis & Rāmin.” PhD diss., University of Chicago, 2015.
- Davis, Dick. Panthea’s Children: Hellenistic Novels and Medieval Persian Romances. New York: Bibliotheca Persica, 2002.
- De Blois, François, and C. A. Storey. Persian Literature: A Bio-Bibliographical Survey Begun by the Late C. A. Storey. 3 vols. London: Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, 1992–97.
- De Bruijn, J. T. P. “Comparative Notes on Sanā’ī and ‘Aṭṭār.” In Classical Persian Sufism from Its Origins to Rumi, edited by Leonard Lewisohn, 360–79. London: Khaniqahi Nimatullahi Publications, 1993.
- . Of Piety and Poetry: The Interaction of Religion and Literature in the Life and Works of Ḥakīm Sanā’ī of Ghazna. Leiden: Brill, 1983.
- Dehkhodā, ‘Alī Akbar. Loghat-nāma-ye Dehkhodā. Edited by Moḥammad Mo‘in and Ja‘far Shahidi. Tehran: Enteshārāt-e Dāneshgāh-e Tehrān, 1373/[1993–94].
- Este‘lāmi, Moḥammad. Introduction to Tazkerat al-awliā, by Farid al-Din ‘Aṭṭār, xvii–xxxxi. Rev. ed. Tehran: Zavvār, 1383/[2004–5].
- Flemming, Barbara. “From Archetype to Oral Tradition: Editing Persian and Turkish Literary Texts.” Manuscripts of the Middle East 3 (1998): 7–11.
- Foruzānfar, Badi‘ al-Zamān. Sharḥ-e aḥvāl va naqd va taḥlil-e āṣār-e Shaykh Farid al-Din Moḥammad ‘Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi. Tehran: Chāp-khāna-ye Dāneshgāh, 1339/[1960–61]. Reprint, Tehran: Āsim, 1389/[2010–11].
- Hägg, Tomas. “The Oriental Reception of Greek Novels: A Survey with Some Preliminary Considerations.” Symbolae Osloenses 61, no. 1 (1986): 99–131.
- Homerin, Th. Emil, ed. and trans. ‘Umar Ibn al-Fāriq: Sufi Verse, Saintly Life. New York: Paulist Press, 2001.

- Ilahi-Gomeshei, Husayn. "Of Scent and Sweetness: 'Aṭṭār's Legacy in Rūmī, Shabistārī, and Ḥāfiẓ." In Lewisohn and Shackle, Spiritual Flight, 27–56.
- Kermani, Navid. The Terror of God: Attar, Job and the Metaphysical Revolt. Translated by Wieland Hoban. Cambridge: Polity Press, 2011.
- Landolt, Hermann. "'Aṭṭār, Sufism, and Ismailism." In Lewisohn and Shackle, Spiritual Flight, 3–26.
- Lewis, Franklin. "The Modes of Literary Production: Remarks on the Composition, Revision and 'Publication' of Persian Texts in the Medieval Period." Persica 17 (2001): 69–83.
- . "One Chaste Muslim Maiden and a Persian in a Pear Tree: Analogues of Boccaccio and Chaucer in Four Earlier Arabic and Persian Tales." In Metaphors and Imagery: Studies in Classical Persian Poetry, edited by Asghar Seyed-Gohrab, 137–203. Leiden: Brill, 2012.
- . "Reading, Writing, and Recitation: Sanā'i and the Origins of the Persian Ghazal." PhD diss., University of Chicago, 1995.
- . "Solṭān Valad and the Political Order: Framing the Ethos and Praxis of Poetry in the Mevlevi Tradition after Rumi." In Persian Language, Literature and Culture: New Leaves, Fresh Looks, edited by Kamran Talattof, 23–47. Abingdon, UK: Routledge, 2015.
- . "Tale of the Righteous Woman (Whose Husband Had Gone on a Journey)." In Converging Zones: Persian Literary Tradition and the Writing of History, edited by Wali Ahmad, 200–219. Costa Mesa, CA: Mazda, 2012.
- Lewisohn, Leonard and Christopher Shackle, eds. 'Aṭṭār and the Persian Sufi Tradition: The Art of Spiritual Flight. London: I. B. Tauris and Institute of Ismaili Studies, 2006.
- Lewisohn, Leonard, and Christopher Shackle. Editors' introduction to Lewisohn and Shackle, Spiritual Flight, xvii–xxvii.
- Miranṣāri, 'Alī. Ketāb-shenāsi-ye Shaykh Farid al-Dīn 'Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi. Tehran: Anjoman-e Āṣār va Mafākhar-e Farhangī, 1384/[2005–6].
- Monzavi, Aḥmad. Fehrest-e noskha-hā-ye fārsi-ye khaṭṭī. 5 vols. Tehran: Mo'assasa-ye Farhangī-ye Manṭeḡa, 1348–51/[1969–72].
- Nafisi, Sa'īd. Jostoju dar aḥvāl va āṣār-e Farid al-Dīn 'Aṭṭār-e Nayshāburi. Tehran: Eqbāl, 1320/[1941].
- Nasr, Seyyed Hossein. "Some Observations on the Place of 'Aṭṭār within the Sufi Tradition." In Colloquio italo-iraniano sul poeta mistico Fariduddīn 'Aṭṭār (Roma, 24–25 Marzo 1977), 5–20. Rome: Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei, 1978.

- O'Malley, Austin. "Poetry and Pedagogy: The Homiletic Verse of Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār." PhD diss., University of Chicago, 2017.
- Paul, Ludwig. "Persian Language i. Early New Persian." In Encyclopaedia Iranica, online ed., edited by Ehsan Yarshater. Updated November 19, 2013. <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/persian-language-1-early-new-persian>.
- Purjavādi, Nasrallāh. Solṭān-e ṭariqat: Savāneh, zendegi, va sharḥ-e āṣār-e Khwāja Aḥmad-e Ghazzālī. Tehran: Āgāh, 1358/[1979].
- Qazvini, Mirzā Moḥammad. Introduction to Tazkerat al-awliā, by Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, 1:1–23. Edited by Reynold Nicholson. London: Luzac, 1905.
- Reinert, B. "'Aṭṭār, Farīd-al-Dīn." In Encyclopaedia Iranica, online ed., edited by Ehsan Yarshater. Updated August 17, 2011. <http://www.iranicaonline.org/articles/attar-farid-al-din-poet>.
- Ritter, Hellmut. "'Aṭṭār." In Encyclopaedia of Islam, 2nd ed., edited by P. Bearman, Th. Bianquis, C. E. Bosworth, E. van Donzel, and W.P. Heinrichs. Leiden: Brill Online. Posted 2012. https://doi.org/10.1163/1573-3912\_islam\_COM\_0074.
- . "Philologika X: Farīdaddīn 'Aṭṭār." Der Islam 25 (1939): 134–73.
- . "Philologika XIV: Farīduddīn 'Aṭṭār II." Oriens 11, no. 1/2 (1958): 1–76.
- Safi, Omid. "'Aṭṭār, Farīd al-Dīn." In Encyclopaedia of Islam, 3rd ed., edited by Kate Fleet, Gudrun Krāmer, Denis Matringe, John Nawas, and Everett Rowson. Leiden: Brill Online. Posted 2016. https://doi.org/10.1163/1573-3912\_ei3\_COM\_23976.
- Sarfarāz, 'Abdu'l-Ḳādir. A Descriptive Catalogue of the Arabic, Persian and Urdu Manuscripts in the Library of the University of Bombay. Bombay: University of Bombay, 1935.
- Shabestari, Maḥmud. Majmu'a-ye āṣār-e Shaykh Maḥmud Shabestari. Edited by Ṣamad Movaḥḥed. Tehran: Ṭahuri, 1365/[1986–87].
- Shafi'i-Kadkani, Moḥammad Reżā. Introduction to Elāhi-nāma, by Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, 29–108. 2nd ed. Tehran: Sokhan, 1388/[2009–10].
- . Introduction to Manṭeq al-ṭayr, by Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, 17–230. 2nd ed. Tehran: Sokhan, 1387/[2008–9].
- . Introduction to Mokhtār-nāma, by Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, 11–66. 2nd ed. Tehran: Sokhan, 1389/[2010–11].
- . Introduction to Moṣibat-nāma, by Farid al-Din 'Aṭṭār, 35–115. 2nd ed. Tehran: Sokhan, 1388/[2009–10].

- , ed. Zabur-e pārsi: Negāhi be zendegi va ghazal-hā-ye ‘Aṭṭār. Tehran: Āgāh, 1378/[1999].
- Shams-e Qays. Al-Mo’jam fī ma‘āyir ash‘ār al-‘ajam. Edited by Sirus Shamisā. Tehran: Enteshārāt-e Dāneshgāh-e Tehrān, 1373/[1994–95].
- Shushtari, Sayyed Nurallāh. Majāles al-mo’menin. Tehran: Ketāb-forushi-ye Eslāmiya, 1365/[1986–87].
- Subtelny, E. M. “Scenes from the Literary Life of Tīmūrid Herāt.” In Logos Islamikos: Studia Islamica in Honorem Georgii Michaelis Wickens, edited by Roger Savory and Dionisius Agius, 137–55. Toronto: Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, 1984.
- Utas, Bo. “Did ‘Adhrā Remain a Virgin?” Orientalia Suecana 33–35 (1984–86): 429–41.
- Yaghoobi, Claudia. Subjectivity in ‘Aṭṭār, Persian Sufism, and European Mysticism. West Lafayette, IN: Purdue University Press, 2017.
- Zanjāni, Barāt. “Ḥakim Neẓāmi-ye Ganjavi va Shaykh Farid al-Din ‘Aṭṭār.” Āyanda 2, no. 9 (Ordibehesht 1362 [April–May 1983]): 106–14.
- Zarrinkub, ‘Abd al-Ḥosayn. Ḥekāyat hamchonān bāqi. Tehran: Sokhan, 1376/[1997–98].
- . Ṣedā-ye bāl-e simorgh. Tehran: Sokhan, 1386/[2007–8].