

EDITORIAL FOREWORD

The Arizona Journal of International and Comparative Law is proud to present the second issue of Volume 35. This issue contains an article from the second ever winner of the S. James Anaya Award for Excellence in International and Comparative Legal Scholarship. The award was inspired by Dean S. James Anaya's commitment to promoting international human rights around the world and his significant contribution to legal scholarship. The Journal created this award to recognize exceptional contributions to the field by SJD or LLM students in the United States. Our hope is that by promoting the legal work for students of international and comparative law we will help foster a legal community rooted in diverse and principled viewpoints.

This year Francis Tom Temprosa, an SJD student at the University of Michigan Law School, was selected to receive the Anaya award. His article, Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement: Expression of Lex Lata or De Lega Ferenda? Status in International Law and Implications on the Law on International Peace and Security, critically analyzes whether these Guiding Principles are binding.

We are also proud to publish Experimentalist Governance in Global Public Health: The Case of UNAIDS, written by Gabrielle Goldstein and Christopher Ansell. This article addresses transnational cooperation, specifically analyzing experimentalist governance in the global response to HIV/AIDS.

Lastly, the Journal features three student authors in this issue. Amanda Dick, Senior Managing Editor, compares prison programming in the United States and European countries. Rachel Dyckman, Senior Note Editor, writes a note with suggestions for criminalizing squatters in the US. Finally, Jovan Ruvalcaba discusses the Trans-Pacific Partnership.

Volume 35.2 contains several interesting articles, and the Journal is pleased to publish each one. This volume marks the third and final issue for AJICL's 2017-2018 Editorial Board. It has been my honor and privilege to be the team leader this year and I look forward to seeing upcoming issues.
